SEP Now Assisting Students

by Lynn Adler

The Supplemental Educational Program (SEP), initiated at Husson in August 1975, is a program funded by a grant from the U.S. Government Department of Health Education, and Welfare administered by Husson. Designed to give specific assistance to conditionally-accepted students and to those students who have low grade averages, the program provides:

a) specialized tutorial services for specific course work (Math, English, and Accounting);
b) selected tutorial services for upperclassmen as the need is identified;
c) remedial work in basic skills such as reading, spelling, mathematics, expression, and oral communication;
d) assistance in learning how to develop adequate study skills and educational attitudes;
e) appropriate personal-social counseling for those students who may have such problems which interfere with academic performance.

The SEP Workroom, located in Room F104 Peabody Hall, provides facilities for tutorial and study sessions. Remedial and resource material at the center may be signed out by students. Audio-visual aids, tape recorders, and calculators are available for use also. Throughout the year, seminars-open to all students-will be offered in the areas of study habits, effective utilization of time, exam preparation and note-taking.

Mrs. Eleanor Horner is Director of SEP. She is also one of the five staff members: the other staff members are Dennis Marble, Curtis Morse, Suzanne Dickinson, and Alan Bills.

Eleanor Horner assists students in areas of Math and Accounting. She received her BS in Mathematics from Stockton State College in New Jersey. Currently she is completing her thesis for her MA in Mathematics from the University of Maine.

Dennis Marble received his M.ED at the University of Maine in the spring of '76. He is a full-time Reading Specialist and handles reading component EH 100, in addition to his workroom hours.

Curtis Morse received his Ph.D. in Mathematics from the University of New Hampshire in 1971. His work deals with developing math skills.

Suzanne Dickinson graduated from University of Maine at Orono and is now taking graduate studies in elementary and guidance counseling and is a SEP English tutor.

Alan Bills is a graduate of University of Maine at Orono and is a Math tutor.

Any student needing help should seek the services of the SEP workroom. Help is available every day from 8:30 to 4:00.

Drug War Intensifies Overseas

Americans In Foreign Jails Say It's A Bad Trip

WASHINGTON, D.C. - - - When Hank Larsen was arrested on a drug charge in Mexico he thought he could pay a fine – "at the most spend 24 hours in the slammer" – and be on his way. That was three years ago and Hank is still in jail in Mexico. He has four years left to serve of his seven-year sentence. His "fine" was pocketed by his lawyer.

Hank Larsen is not his real name, but his plight is fairly typical of the thousands of young Americans imprisoned overseas on drug charges. Many are serving lengthy sentences for what would be misdeameanors or less under U.S. law. Some have been victims of torture, extortion, systematic harassment or other forms of abuse. Whatever their guilt or innocence, it's a bad trip and there's only so much Uncle Sam can do to help them.

The State Department sees the problem as worldwide and growing. According to official consular records, some 2,500 U.S. citizens were serving sentences in foreign jails at the end of 1975, about three-quarters of them for narcotics offenses. This is more than double the number in 1973.

On average the American detainees are young – the typical age is 25 or 26 – college-educated and from middle-class backgrounds. Virtually all of them are well versed in their "constitutional rights" and believe that somehow the American embassy can get them out of prison. But these are just two more misconceptions in a whole string of misconceptions and misjudgments that probably landed them in their predicament in the first place.

The lure of "easy money" is a major snare and delusion. For contrary to what many young Americans believe,most countries have much stiffer drug laws than the United States.

"There's nothing easy about this business. It's rough and the risks are enormous. You're being had the minute you decide to get involved," says Loren Lawrence, deputy administrator of the State Department's Bureau of Security and Consular Affairs, which is charged with assisting and protecting Americans overseas.

Even "doing your own thing," if that includes carrying around a few joints for personal use, can turn into an awfully uncomfortable and costly cross-cultural experience.

"It was such a little amount. We never dreamed it would get so heavy," says Deborah Friedman, whose half-ounce of marijuana cost her $7,000 and 37 days in a Mexican jail. "And it could have cost a whole lot more. There are people still down there who didn't have any more grass than we did," Friedman told a San Francisco newspaper earlier this year. "And some were arrested and didn't have any, who have been in for years."

While a lucky few of those arrested manage to be acquitted after only a few months in jail, the average sentence around the world for "possesion and trafficking" of marijuana is seven years and some months. For hard drugs like heroin and cocaine, jail terms skyrocket, with 30-year sentences not being unheard of. Three countries – Iran, Algeria and Turkey – allow the death penalty in narcotics cases.

"We just didn't take it all that seriously at first," Margaret Engle said in a newspaper interview after being released from a Turkish prison in 1973. "We were so used to the American system of justice we thought it would only take a few hours to clear up."

It took almost a year to clear up, however. Eight anxious months with a life sentence hanging over her head. Eight months spent in a tiny concrete cell, 15 by 20 feet, which she shared with two dozen other female convicts. An open sewer ran along one wall. The prison was 300 years old, infested with large rats, lice and bedbugs.

"The thing people seem to forget is that the American system of justice stops at our borders," says consular officer Roy Davis, who spends most of his time at the State Department working on prisoner problems."Laws are different, judicial systems are different, judicial guarantees are different, prison systems are different."

Piled in his in-box are cables from Manila, Nassau, Bangkok, Sydney, Calgary, Casablanca, Bogota and Guadalajara detailing new arrests. About 20-25 new cases come in every day, Davis says.

The new arrestees shouldn't count necessarily on bail, the right to remain silent, trial by jury, the right of appeal or other rights provided by the American legal system. Americans abroad are subject to the same legal procedures and penalties as the citizens in whatever country they find themselves. In four of the ten countries where the large majority of Americans are confined, this means they are "guilty until proven innocent," the law being based on the Napoleonic Code rather than English common law. Pre-trial detention of up to one year is common and in some places the prisoner need not even be present at his trial.

Harsh conditions and mistreatment of prisoners are common in many parts of the world, a fact the State Department views with growing concern as the number of Americans behind bars overseas continues to climb.In Mexico, where nearly 600 Americans are incarcerated (more than in any other foreign country), a significant number of charges about harsh conditions and abuse have been substantiated. There have been instances, for example, of such illegal but accepted practices as beatings, confiscation of property and denial of prompt access to the American consul.

What can the U.S. Government do? Overseas the fact of national sovereignty poses special problems and constraints. Apart from protesting to the appropriate authorities any illegal and inhumane treatment of American prisoners, the legal role of U.S. consular officers is limited. They can't use government funds to pay bail, legal fees or other expenses, as some prisoners seem to expect.

They can make every effort to see that the prisoner's rights under local law are fully observed and that treatment meets internationally accepted standrds. They can visit the prisoner as soon as possible after the arrest is known and provide him with a list of reputable local attorneys from which he may select his defense counsel. They also can contact family and friends, but only if the prisoner requests it.

Many young and enterprising consular officers, despite staggering workloads, go beyond these legal responsibilities. In Mexico, Peter Wood and Donna Hrinac, who together were responsible for some 185 Americans in 13 widely scattered jails, wrote articles in English-language magazines and newspapers to enlist the support and interest of the American community in the plight of the American prisoners. They also wrote to U.S. pharmaceutical companies for contributions of vitamins.

"I was tending to push the Department to do more for prisoners or anyone in trouble," recalls Wood, a former Peace Corps volunteer and psychiatric counselor. "That seems to be the direction the Department is leaning in."

Still, there are definite limits to what consular officers can do, Hrinac points out. And all their efforts aren't going to change the basic differences between American and foreign penal systems.

Says veteran consular officer Loren Lawrence, "The prison system we have in the United States is the product of a moderately enlightened nation with a surplus of money to spend – and just look at our prisons. What can you possibly anticipate in a poor or developing country, for example, with an already overburdened infrastructure, that doesn't have anywhere near enough resources for people outside prisons much less inside?"

As too many Americans are learning, the answer is grim. Serving time overseas is the kind of trip you don't want to take.

Student Health Center New Location

The Student Health Center has been moved from Bell to Carlisle over the summer. It is now located in rm. 135 - 137. The hours are 8:00 A.M. - 2:00 P.M. Monday through Friday. If there is a change in these hours there will be a note on the door and hopefully in the POW-WOW.

The Bangor Area Student Health clinic, better known as BASH has been moved to a new location in Lewiston Hall on the campus of the Bangor Community College on Texas Ave. The hours are 8:30 A.M. - 4:30 P.M., Monday through Friday. Mr. Charles Came R.N., who is also a nurse practitionner is on the staff again this year. Sheila Cyr R.N. is new to the staff and has worked for several years at the Cutler Health Center at the University of Maine at Orono. George Wood M.D. has joined the staff and will be at BASH two afternoons a week from 1:00 P.M. - 3:00 P.M. The other doctors are Robert Graves, head of health services at the Cutler Health Center and Clem Jurgeleit, a surgeon on the staff of the Eastern Maine Medical Center.

If you have a health problem visit the health center here before going to BASH since you may have your needs taken care of here and save a trip to BASH. Feel free to come in even though you might think your need is small or perhaps not what you would classify as a health problem. If I can not give you the help you need I will help you find someone who can.

After hour care may be obtained at the Eastern Maine Medical Center on State St. or St. Joseph's Hospital on Center St. The Cutler Health Center at the University of Maine in Orono does not care for Husson students unless you are sent there by the doctor at BASH for an illness that requires your admission as a hospital patient.

Any questions on the above, see Barbara Miller. Any programs you would like to see I would like to hear about them. Anyone interested in going to the UMO class on birth control, speak to me and I will make the arrangements. That includes men.

Husson Security Questionable

During Homecoming weekend an event occured that made Husson security seem rather questionable.

A girl, not a Husson student, was admitted into a room by security Saturday morning. This girl simply stated that she was the owner of the room and without checking, security let her in. She was with two other girls, and the three of them remained in the room until Sunday morning. Other girls saw them on the floor but just assumed that they had permission to be in the room. With this type of security we could all be in danger of having our room opened when we are gone.

This was brought to the attention of Dr. Eisenhardt, head of Student Services. He said that under the present policy security should seek positive identification before opening any doors. The security we currently have is quite new and the policies are not yet solid. Security has been reproached on this incident and has assured that it will not occur again.

Who would be liable for any articles stolen in such a case? In this case only a necklace was stolen so the owner is not going to make an issue of it. What if it had been her stereo or television, what then? Dr. Eisenhardt said that the institution would be held responsible. Because of this, in the future they will be extra careful before opening a door.

If you should be locked out of your room and have no way of identifying yourself, they may not let you in at all. By positive identification it need not mean your Husson College Identification card. If your Resident Assistant is there he or she may verify that you are the owner of the room. In the evening the Resident Assistant on duty can verify for you by checking a list which they have in the office. This, of course, is a great inconvenience; but it is the only way that the institution can protect both you and themselves.

Husson Appoints New Admissions Director

President Franklin A. Peters of Husson College in Bangor is pleased to announce the promotion of Roger A. Daigle to the position of Director of Admissions.

A 1972 graduate of Husson with a B.S. in Business Administration, Daigle served as an Admissions representative from 1973 to 1974, and as an associate director from 1974 to 1975.

A member of the American Personnel and Guidance Association, the National and New England Associations of College Admissions Counselors, the American Marketing Association, and the Bangor Jaycees, Daigle is presently attending a week-long admissions seminar in Denver, Colorado. He organized the first "College Night" for the Bangor area in 1974, where perspective college students were able to talk with New England and Mid-Atlantic college and university representatives - all at the same time and place.

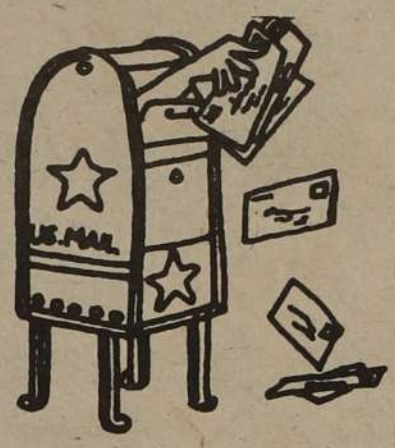

As director of admissions, Daigle is responsible for Husson's formal recruitment program of new students, which includes disseminating information concerning Husson's programs to guidance counselors and high school students, attending national and statewide college fairs, and providing direction for the Admissions staff.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Adrien J. Daigle of Madawaska, Daigle is a 1968 graduate of the Madawaska High School. He resides in Bangor.

Letter To The Editor

To the Editor:

Following is a few lines I wrote, while sitting here in my room pondering my past experience here at Husson College.

HUSSON COLLEGE

Institute of higher education, sometimes masquerades segregation.

Open door policy always available, but is generally passed down the table.

Sports can be fun and grand, if you are from the mainland.

Most professors are alright, but some are not too bright.

Maintenance is here to clean and repair, but never request 'cause it'll take a year.

Financial aid is designed for the needy, but who comes out on top? The Greedy ...

If administration action is taken,
but whose approval, no one is certain.

Changes should be made all around,
to get this school off the ground.

People are forced to overlook, or their goose will be cooked.

That is the purpose of this poem, is to remain unknown.

Everyone deserves to be educated,
rather than persuaded.

This is a school of higher education, not a school of moral suasion.

From The President's Pad

BY FRANK PETERS

In last week's Pad, I touched on TIME, that elusive something that philosophers and scientist have not yet really been able to define. TIME, like death, is still a great mystery. TIME can be merciful or cruel. TIME is both subjective and objective. There are occasions, such as a visit to the dentist, when five minutes seems forever. There are other occasions, such as Christmas vacation, when it seems to go before it ever started. Thus, TIME means something different to us at different times.

It seems to me, as I get older, that TIME flies faster than ever. In one way, I suppose, this indicates a happy life. In another way, it brings about a certain sadness: not about its rapid passage, but rather about opportunities forever lost.

To those of you who feel that you have plenty of TIME in this world, all I can say is that it's later than you think. To you seniors, it may seem that a winter evening over a textbook passes very slowly; but before you will realize it, the year will be over and your undergraduate experience will be behind you. Like everyone else, you are a prisoner of something none of us understands, that ineffable dimension known as TIME.

If the philosophers and scientists cannot agree on what is TIME, the poets may better disclose its many meanings, some of which are full of sadness and dramatic irony. It was Macbeth, who in his despair cried out:

"Tomorrow, and tomorrow, and tomorrow,
Creeps in this pretty pace from day to day
To the last syllable of recorded time,
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death."

Music Box

by Dennis Daigle

On top of the new releases out is Images by Dan Hartman. If you have never heard of Dan Hartman, don't let it surprise you. Most people have not. Chances are very good that you have heard his music if you have listened to the radio in the past few years. He joined The Edgar Winter Group in January, 1972 and since then has written and sang lead on such hits as Free Ride and Hangin' Around.

He first established himself in 1971 when he did a tape of thirteen original songs and did it all himself, including playing all instruments. This led to his career with Edgar Winter and now his solo album which is a mixture of everything from some easy going jazz to funky rock and roll. He is backed by Edgar Winter on several cuts as well as Rick Derringer on one. Among the more notable songs are Thank You For The Good Times, My Love, Shake It Down, and If Only I Were Stronger. Basically, it is fine listening and a good display of professionalism.*

Hello from all the Delta Sisters! We hope your first few weeks here at Happy Hussonville High haven't been too rough on you.

Although we're small in number this year, we are really "on the ball"! Delta & Friends breezed through the intramural volleyball season undefeated, with a record of 7 - 0. We would like to thank Chris Hughes, Patty McDonald, Cindy Stacey, and Verna Eldridge for being a part of our winning team. Thanks a lot, Girls!

The Floor is starting to get rowdy!

Rumor has it that Sandy was flying high with a nice-looking soldier Friday.

Hey, Pam, you can stop bouncing now.

Woodie, you evil thing, who was that windbag you were with last Thursday?

Linda, the next time you go to a hockey game, tone down the snoring. The girls are confusing it with the whistle!

Lisa has the makings of a good rock star. Don't you agree, Pam?

Look out for Michelle truckin' around campus!

Til next week, keep the Delta spirit!

Hello again everyone. Hope all of you had a great weekend. Maybe even some of you went hunting. Hope you had some luck. MEX had a great football game against TKE last week. We lost 36-12, but they never ran away with the game. MEX was tough and they always knew we were around, one way or another. The Bros. were visited by an old brother last week Good old Bunnell can still down a few brews, ah guys? When does he breathe?

The lounge is coming around great. It looks really good. We have the walls almost all done. A few more coats of varnish and let the sun shine. It looks great. Good work Brothers.

the boys went down to the Gathering last Thursday night to the disco. They do not remember coming back, but they had a good time, right Ray and Gary? Do you want to come see my fish? Better luck next time guys. At least you did not have to make your bed.

A few of the brothers stayed on the floor this weekend to make sure the "Millers" kept flowing.

Keep the faith.

The brothers hope everybody made it through last week, especially the over abundancy of testing that took place. Last weekend started early for many people who were anxious to get home, we hope you all enjoyed yourselves. Those who hung around could be found partaking in a variety of leisurely activities.

Husson Soccer Team suffered their first defeat to an important Portland-Gorham team, 2-0. It was a tough loss, but maybe it was what the team needed, to open their eyes to the fact that there are other teams with good potential.

Kappa won the first of their interfraternal football games. We defeated a determined Phi team in a hard fought game by a score of 26-18. Brother Wayne Marquis lead Kappa's running game with three touchdown runs.

I am sure everybody enjoyed themselves at Kappa's Octoberfest last night. We thank you for your participation.

Not much other devastating news, except to have another enjoyable weekend.

The Brothers of KDP

TKE

The brothers hope that everybody had a nice three-day weekend. Things were pretty quiet around here.

TKE finished the football season with a 5-0-1 record, winning the hard fought battle for the trophy. Intrafraternals are now in the finals, with TKE meeting Kappa. By the time this paper hits the press the championship should be decided.

Congratulations to the soccer team on their recent victories. Keep up the good work and we will be expecting another championship team.

Glad to see the Order of Diana off to a good start by sponsoring an auction, candy apple, and bake sale.

The brothers are psyched for the Octoberfest, we hope there is a good turnout.

This week our TKE troll is being escorted by Frater Paul Freeman.

Social Committee

The Social Committee held its first Coffee House of the year, last Wednesday night, October 6, the guest speaker was Sandy Patrick from the Plant Studio in Brewer. Mrs. Patrick gave a very amusing and informative lecture on the types, varieties, a care of many of the most common house plants. Plants were sold and Mrs. Patrick instructed the individuals on the care that should be given the plants.

Approximately 35 students and faculty attended the Coffee House in the DDC, which is a very good turn out for the first one of the year.

Look for further posters on Coffee House activities and we hope to see you there.

The Outing Club

The Outing Club began the year right with a trip to Bar Harbor and Acadia National Park on Saturday, October 2, 1976. We toured the entire island at our own leisure, taking time out to visit such spots as Thunderhole, Seawall, Cadillac Mountain, Beech Cliffs, and downtown Bar Harbor. The fall foliage looked absolutely beautiful, and everyone was armed with cameras to capture special moments. We left early and had breakfast out, packed a lunch to bring with us, and drove back to campus at sunset.

We hope to schedule many more such outings this year. Our meetings have just begun, and new members are welcome to join anytime. We'd like to see some new faces with lots of good ideas on places we can see, ways in which we can spend our money, and ideas for fund-raising projects. Our meetings are every Wednesday at 6:00 in Room F142 and last just a short while. So if you're interested in going places and doing things, come to the next meeting of the Outing Club. Hope to see you there.

How To Build Your Writing Skills

"You don't have to plan to fail; all you have to do is fail to plan." Anonymous

Written assignments indicate your grasp of class work. Obviously it is important that you know exactly what is expected of you in each instance. The most common assignments are either reports or research papers. Appraise what you are being asked to write. Think about the research, reading, and writing you will have to do. And be sure to allow yourself plenty of time to meet the deadline.

Reports are a test of your ability to understand and react to something you have read. An instructor usually expects a short summary of the content of the book or article, your comments on the author's presentation and style, your personal reaction to the work, and an evaluation of its importance.

Research papers are a test of your ability to choose a topic, investigate it, organize the material, and then write about it clearly and accurately. When you are asked to choose a topic, be realistic about your choice. Can you handle it? Does your library have enough resource books? Four or five sources, at least, should be used. the most effective way to collect data is to use index cards. Each card should indicate the source, author, publisher, date and page number. After you have completed the research, arrange the cards in a sequence that will allow you to write about the subject with continuity and coherence.

Before you begin writing a report or paper it is always best to make an outline of what you plan to say. Outlines are as indispensable to such writing as blueprints or drawings are to carpenters. First, write down the main headings, leaving several lines of space in between. Then, under each of the headings, list the subheadings that are to be covered. Identify the specific points that should be developed under the subheadings, and so on. When the blueprint of the material is complete, you are ready to start writing. Organize your outline well, follow it carefully, and your written presentation will reflect a logical and thorough development of the subject.

WRITE, REVIEW AND REVISE

"Those who write clearly have readers, those who write obscurely have commentators." Albert Camus

When you are ready to start writing, make sure that you have your reference notes and books nearby, a good light, and good writing tools. Plan to work without interruption for one or two hours. Your outline will serve as your guide.

Even the most accomplished writers expect to make many revisions. So, when you write the first draft, concentrate on content and clarity more than on style. It is a good idea to leave plenty of space between lines for the corrections, additions, and polishing that will come later.

The introductory paragraph in a composition should give a clear idea of what you are setting out to do. Subsequent paragraphs should develop the main idea in an orderly way, with each paragraph containing a transition from the preceding one. The final paragraph should summarize and conclude what has been said. By reading the first and last paragraphs of most non-fiction writing, you should be able to grasp both premise and conclusion of an author's thoughts.

After you have completed the initial draft, put it aside for two or three days. Come back to review it when you are fresh. Be a stern critic. Have you started each heading or subheading with a topic sentence or paragraph that states what you are setting out to do? Do the main sections and subdivisions present the material clearly? Have you omitted points that you listed in the outline? Is there unnecessary or repetitious information? Does the conclusion summarize what has gone before? Are your footnotes and bibliography correct?

Once you have gone over the draft for content and accuracy, review and edit it for style. Try to read as objectively as you can. Remember the underlying importance of grammar and criticize your use of words, phrases, clauses, sentences, and paragraphs. Does one thought flow evenly and obviously from another?

You might want to change the sequence of sentences or paragraphs for better presentation. If so, cut, shift, and staple new parts together. Try to be as brief as possible. Delete what is superfluous and distracting to your main thoughts. It has been said that crisp writing usually has a good deal of shortening in it ! The total effect must be readable. Rewrite a section if necessary. Remember that carelessness in spelling, punctuation, and capitalization will also influence the quality of your work.

Now you are ready to make the final copy. Type it if you can, or write very legibly with a carbon copy for future reference. Leave generous margins on the left and right sides of each page. When you have finished, proofread the paper, making any corrections neatly. Review your references or footnotes once again for accuracy. It is always a good idea to prepare a title page and if possible, to submit the completed assignment in a folder or binder.

Your grades may depend on how well you have mastered these writing techniques. When your marked paper has been returned, review the instructor's comments - you can learn from mistakes you might have made. Remember how well you write will also be an important measure of your success after you leave school. With patience and hard work you can experience the content and style of your writing. The choice of words is right, the grammar is correct, the flow of language is smooth, and it says just what you hoped it would! That is the reward of a successful writer.

Husson Players

"Alive And Ready"

The Husson Players are alive and ready for the coming year of exciting productions. Our first meeting proved to be successful, as several people showed their interest in rebuilding the Players. With the help of Mr. Weymouth, we elected Jo Vaillancourt as temporary chairperson and Donna Sinsabaugh as recorder. We also formed a committee to revise the constitution of the Husson Players. They are: Tony Bishop, Chris Carter, and Andrea Blanchette.

At our next meeting we will ratify our constitution, discuss plans and ideas for future productions, fund-raising events, etc. If you are at all interested in theatre not only from the standpoint of acting, but also from any area of production (makeup, set design & construction, costumes, advertisement & promotion), please feel free to attend our next meeting. It will be held Wednesday, Oct. 13 and 3:30 in Room S102. If this is not a convenient time, please contact Jo Vaillancourt in Hart 125 or Mr. Weymouth in S126 Peabody Hall. We need people with ideas and with a willingness to make the Husson Players a success. Hope to see you at our next meeting.

S.E.A. Holds Open House

The Student Education Association held its OPEN HOUSE on Tuesday, Oct. 5 and it was a great success. It was a time for education students to get to know others in their field and to get better acquainted with the teachers in the Business Education Department; Miss Renaud, Dr. Bean, and our advisor, Mrs. Beaudoin.

The Student Education Association is an organization for business education students, and all others interested in education. Its purpose is to foster ideas, interest and enthusiasm among business education students.

Speakers included Natalie Scavo, Jim Watson and Dick Roe who spoke about SEA in general, its future goals, and the many contributions SEA can offer students. An exhibit of high school textbooks, educational magazines and subscriptions, and many other interesting articles made for a relaxed and informal atmosphere of discussion.

Our first scheduled meeting will be held on Thursday, October 14 at 6:30 p.m. ALL education students, and others interested, are invited and encouraged to bring ideas and suggestions for what they would like to see in the future for SEA.

Munley Saves Braves

Husson Soccer Men Deadlock With A Tough Plymouth State Squad

The Husson Braves coming off a defeat at the hands of Portland-Gorham, traveled to Plymouth St., N.H. and played Plymouth even 1-1. The game was played in a steady rain and the condition of the field was treacherous. The game was a major defensive game and the mud and water played a large part. Again the defense came through. Bill Muncey who played the finest game of his career was credited with 26 saves. It was also the entire defensive effort of Bert Boucher, Rudi Cabral, and Paul Tabor. Pete Sirois who came in for an injured Bert Boucher turned in a fine performance. Dennis Cyr was also credited with a good game.

Plymouth St. scored with 10 minutes left in the game and Husson scored with just 3 minutes remaining. Joe Mello scored from 35 yards out on a lofty shot that went right under the crossbar. The Plymouth St. coach said it was the best game his team has put together this season. On Husson's side Bill Munley just seemed to do everything right. His diving and blocked shots kept the Braves intact. The Plymouth St. coach had nothing but praise for Muncey, stating he was the best goalie he's seen thus far. With Munley playing an incredible game and the entire team playing more aggressive than they did in any other game. The Braves seemed to benefit from their defeat, it brought the best out in Munley and a new confidence in every one of the Braves.

Brave Diamond Men End Busy Fall Season

This years fall baseball schedule finished on a wet note. This past week-end the Husson baseball team was to compete in the University of Maine fall baseball classic. The tournament consisted of four teams, Husson, University of Maine at Orono, Fairfield University, University of New Haven. Unfortunately this classic never became a reality due to bad weather. The weather did hold out long enough for the Braves to compete in 20 games. That's 20 more games than any other northeast college conference team.

At present Coach MacGregor is carrying 26 ball players. The number of players that will make the southern trip to Florida will vary as to who works in all fund raising activities. Look for the nucleus of 6 veterans combined with fine newcomers to make the Braves the team to beat in the Northeast College Conference. Those veterans include: Leon Pacquin, Tom Muncey, Bob Tweedie, Terry Weeks, Wayne Marquis, and Mark Ferri.

Husson Booters Suffer First Setback Of The Season

The Husson soccer team suffered its first defeat at the hands of University of Maine at Portland Gorham. Portland Gorham was also the first team to score on Husson, the final score was 2 - 0. The Braves playing their stiffest competition to date could not generate a potent offense, and never really tested the Portland defense. The Husson defense had their hands full with a steady attack of the Portland offense. The defense, anchored by Bill Munley was credited with 16 saves. Paul Tabor, Joe Mello, and Bert Boucher were nothing less than outstanding. Fighting off the persistant attack from Portland Paul (Moon) Heher, Ruby Cabral, and Steve Noyes also turned in fine performances.
