Clara Swan Honored at Homecoming '90

A testimonial dinner was held in honor of Clara Lincoln Swan '33 during the Homecoming '90 festivities. Over 300 guests gathered at the Dickerman Dining Commons to pay tribute to Clara who has meant so much to Husson College and who has touched so many lives.

Clara is a native of Princeton, Maine and received her early education there. Later she moved to Brewer where she graduated from Brewer High School as valedictorian.

In 1933 Clara graduated from the Bangor Maine School of Commerce, the school that later would become Husson College. Again, she was valedictorian. Following this, she taught for five years on the secondary level. In 1939, she received her bachelor's degree from American International College and returned to Husson, this time as a teacher. In 1951 she was awarded the Master of Education degree by the University of Maine.

She is, in every sense, a master teacher who has that rare quality of being able to motivate her students. A genuinely concerned person, Clara took her students' cares as her own. It was not unusual for her to help a student financially who without her help might not have made it through school.

Clara became a first-rate administrator and coach, while continuing to teach. By 1969 she had become the Vice President for Academic Affairs and had coached her basketball teams to over three hundred wins.

In 1973 she went to Casco Bay College where she served as President from 1975 to 1981. That was the year that she retired to a sixty-hour week.

Videotaped Classes Offered for Home Study

Thousands of Maine people are so isolated by geography and circumstances that it is difficult, if not impossible, for them to pursue an education beyond high school.

This winter Husson College's Continuing Education Division will inaugerate a novel teaching program that it hopes will break down the barriers of isolation and eventually bring Husson classroom teaching into rural homes throughout the state.

The concept, according the CED executive director, John R. Benoit, is to videotape a full semester's classroom instruction and provide video cassettes to students who may view them at home. All the students will need is a television set and a VCR, says Benoit. Textbooks, of course, will be a major component of the at-home learning process, as they are in a classroom, says Benoit.

Audio cassettes of each lesson will be another learning tool and a convenient way for students to review the lessons while driving or when a VCR is not available.

Benoit says that assignments and papers will be sent to the instructor for grading. Midterm and final exams will be given at one of Husson's seven CED centers. For those who cannot travel to a center, arrangements will be made to have a monitored exam given at a nearby public school.

Yet another convenience will be a toll-free 800 number that students may call should they have questions to ask the professor.

Filming is under way for the pilot course-Principles of Accounting--which is being taught by Professor Dewey W. Martin. Production is being directed and edited by advanced broadcasting majors of the New England School of Broadcasting, located on the Husson campus.

Benoit says that although Husson has seven CED centers that annually enroll some 1,800 students, many prospective students live too far from them to be able to attend classes regularly.

"Inclement winter weather makes it hazardous to travel long distances to these locations -- especially at night, " says Benoit. "Modern technology and the mail service, however, provide an opportunity for delivering high-quality adult education in an immensely convenient manner to every home in Maine."

Education at Home Via the Computer

Four students in Dr. Jesse Baker's Introduction to Business course at Husson College won't attend a single class this semester, and that's just fine with Baker.

The associate professor of business and computers will be delivering his lectures via computer to four selected students in a pilot program that he hopes will be a model for scores of "distance education" courses that may follow.

"The use of computers to deliver distance education courses addresses many inherent problems associated with the traditional approach to education," says Baker.

Since many prospective students are working parents or are unable to attend classes at Husson or its six statewide Continuing Education Division sites, Baker's idea is to bring the classroom into their homes through a computer. Students must have, or have access to, a computer and printer in order to receive the lessons and respond. Baker sees this as no hindrance what with the proliferation of computers in the home and work place.

"This approach to course delivery means that a minimum of students is no longer the determining factor regarding what a school can afford to deliver because the potential student body is immense," says Baker.

Although during this pilot project Baker will meet with students periodically to discuss the progress of the course, future courses will not need this contact.

Baker emphasizes that there will be day-to-day near instantaneous communication between student and professor and among the students themselves.

Baker explains that the Bulletin Board System software to be used has several advantages. Chief among them are fast communication using the statewide telephone network and printouts that can be reviewed by the students as the course progresses.

"Traditional classroom notetaking is almost automatic with this system," says Baker. "The beauty of it is that some students who may be relectant to speak or ask questions in class should have no such reticence on a computer. Also,they may respond to one another's questions or correspond with me privately if they wish."

Baker says that this pilot project should answer questions concerning course designing, logistics of delivery, and identify problems that must be solved before the concept is adopted for wide use by Husson faculty.

"Eventually," he says, "it should take no longer to develop a course to be given via computer than it does to develop a traditional classroom course. And, from my research, I believe a majority of courses at Husson could be delivered this way to any particular group of students."

Consortium Attracts Employers

Fourteen Maine institutions of higher education cooperate each year to attract employers to interview their collective senior classes. The Maine Recruiting Consortium consists of the career services directors of seven University of Maine System campuses and seven private colleges in the state. The University System campuses represented in the consortium are: Augusta, Farmington, Fort Kent, Machias, Orono, Presque Isle, and Southern Maine. The private college members include Bates, Bowdoin, Colby, Husson, St. Joseph's, Thomas and Westbrook.

Founded in the mid-1980's with ten charter members, the consortium has grown to fourteen members. The unusual working relationship among public and private institutions has been successful in meeting the common objectives of matching employers' needs with college-educated applicants. The Maine Recruiting Consortium attracts employers who otherwise may not visit each individual campus because of time and budget constraints.

The consortium invites employers twice a year to events at which they may conveniently interview employment candidates from the senior classes of the members. The interview dates for this academic year are December 6, 1990, at the Bangor Civic Center and February 28, 1991, at the Holiday Inn by the Bay in Portland.

Only employers who hire graduates in either business or liberal arts are invited to participate because all of the schools have these majors in common. In late April each year the members of the Consortium meet once again in an event for their education majors.

Each year the chairmanship of the Maine Recruiting Consortium rotates to a different member school. This year's chairperson is Bud Vassey, Director for Career Development at Husson College in Bangor.

But Clara has transcended the world of higher education. She has selflessly served the community in a variety of ways. Service to the Girl Scouts, YWCA, the United Way and R. S. V. P. are but a few. Today she continues to serve as a member of the Board of Trustees of the Saint Joseph Health Care Foundation. At an age when most people are having meals delivered to them, Clara is a driver for Meals for ME in her hometown of Hampden.

Through the years, Clara has been extremely active in the Altrusa Club of Bangor and the international organization. She has, as well, been active in the Pi Rho Zeta International Commerce Fraternity serving from 1966 to 1975 as Governor General. She hosts the Husson Alumni Sorority which meets monthly. Not unexpectedly, she has received numerous honors including a citation in the Congressional Record.

The thousands of students and friends whose lives she has touched can attest to her devotion to their welfare and her major contribution to their intellectual development. Thank you Clara for your unselfish and giving nature, as well as for your lifetime of service to Husson College and to the Community.

Scholarship Established

Ninety alumni and friends have donated $8,128 to establish the Clara Lincoln Swan Scholarship, as of press time. This special endowed scholarship will be awarded annually on the basis of need to a woman in the Business Teacher Education Department. In the absence of a suitable candidate, it will be awarded to a member of the women's varsity basketball team.

Sports Hall of Fame Inducts Eight

Eight former Husson College athletes were inducted into the school's Sports Hall of Fame during Homecoming at a special induction ceremoney held in the Faculty Dining Room in Peabody Hall.

Honored for their outstanding contributions to Husson sports programs were Delmar "Chappy" Clark, class of 1971, basketball and soccer; Joseph Callahan, '69, golf; Donald "Joe" Paul, '62, baseball; Ben Brandao, '73, soccer; Joseph Mesi, '79, basketball; Shirley Libby Mulcahey, '46, basketball; Barbara Greeley Goode, '54, basketball; and Mary Whited, '79, basketball.

Clark's basketball career at Husson reached its zenith in 1964 when the 15-6 Braves won the New England College Conference title and he was named the All-Tournament Player. He scored a career high 427 points that year and was credited with 260 rebounds. Husson compiled a 45-18 record when Clark was a starter.

Callahan's golf prowess led Husson to league titles all four years that he played. He won the NAIA tournament and was the NAIA District 5 representative in the national tournament.

Third baseman Joe Paul helped lead Husson to three baseball league championships in the three years he played. He had a .400 career batting average, with a high of .438 one year.

Brandao lifted Husson soccer to new heights during his playing days. The Braves won three Northeast College Conference titles, won the District 5 championship twice and were NAIA District champions for two years during his tenure with the team.

In the four years that Joe Mesi played basketball for Husson, the Braves recorded a 96-11 record. His scoring and rebouding statistics lifted him to national prominence during his career and in 1979 he was named to the All State and All NAIA District 5 teams. He is the second leading rebounder and seventh leading scorer in Husson history.

Shirley Libby Mulcahey was a left-handed hook shot artist on the 1946 women's basketball team that won sixteen games and lost only one. That lone loss was by one point. She was the team's second highest scorer.

Barbara Greeley Goode played center and guard on the women's basketball team during the 1954-55 season. A strong rebounder and defensive player, she was instrumental in that team's 18-0 record--Husson's first undefeated women's basketball team.

Mary Whited never missed a game during her four-year basketball career, 1976-79. As a quick point guard and defensive player, she led the team in assists each year. Her intense play helped the Braves to two upset wins over the University of Maine. The team had a 45-21 record during her playing years.

WBA Star Outfielder Still Going Strong at 46

Harry Greenfield, a '66 graduate of Husson, spent three years with the Boston Red Sox organization, advancing as far as Class A.

By Jim O'Toole

The year was 1969 and Harry Greenfield had just completed his fourth season of Class A baseball with the Boston Red Sox farm team in Greenville, S.C. He had hit .300, one of only two players in the Red Sox minor league program to attain that level.

"I thought I was ready to make the jump to double-A, but the Sox did not buy that," Greenfield said. "They offered me a raise of $25 per month to go back to Greenville. I think the only other .300 hitter in the organization got a much heftier raise."

That "other .300 hitter" was Carl Yastrzemski.

"At that time, my wife was pregnant and my baseball future was not exactly bright with the Sox," he said. "Yaz was the crown jewel in the system and there were some other real promising outfielders on the way up—Jim Rice, Fred Lynn and Dewey Evans.

"I figured out the handwriting on the wall and decided to pack it in. Regrets, yes, but as I look back, it was the right thing to do. There are only three outfielders on a baseball team and I knew I was up against the wall with that talent pool." Today, more than two decades later, Greenfield has no regets, although he is still playing baseball in the Westchester Baseball Association at the age of 46.

Playing it well, too, as a starter in center field with the New Rochelle Robins, for whom he is hitting above .300. He has made a big hit in the business world, too, owning his own postal mailing concern and maintaining homes in Jamaica Estates, Queens, and Maine.

"I'll keep playing baseball as long as I can," he said. "I'm the same height and weight—6-foot-2 and 195 pounds—I was in college and my arms, legs and speed are OK. Being older, I can outsmart outguess a lot of these young pitchers. That's the essence of experience being the best teacher."

Greenfield would like to play past 50, eyes, health, and reflexes willing.

"I love the vitality of the game and I love working with the young guys on the Robins," he said. "The one thing that could hasten my exit in a few years is vision. It's 20-30 now and a doctor told me I could need glasses down the road. I've never worn them in a game and I don't see myself playing with specs."

He's been playing the game since Little League in Pelham and competed in Babe Ruth, American Legion and high school in New Rochelle, where he was an All-County choice as a senior.

In a celebrated college career at Husson in Maine, Greenfield attracted pro scouts with a four-year average of .414. He was signed by the Red Sox in 1964 as a 15th-round draft choice. At that time, he had begun playing with the Robins in the Colonial League, the forerunner of the WBA. In between stops with the Yonkers Chippwas and the Pelham Mets, Greenfield has played 19 years for the Robins. His career average with the New Rochelle team is .362, including a peak of .622 in 1980.

What is the key to longevity?

"That's easy—the alumninum bat," he replied without hesitation. "It has added years to my career and probably 20-30 points per season to my batting average. When I was in college, I was extra proud if hitting above .400 because I used a wooden bat all the time. I don't think I'd be playing this long without the alumninum bat."

For all the alumninum bat has done for his career, Greenfield professes ambivalence about its worth.

"When you hit with the aluminum, the ball flies off the bat" he said. "It's light and easy to handle. You can still drive the ball regardless where you make contact. In contrast, you don't get similar results with wood, where it's been known to splinter.

He likes the WBA, for what it does for hopeful youngsters and past-their-prime players who still love to play the game.

"To me, Dick Caswell, who founded the Robins, is Mr. Baseball in these parts," he said. "He lives and dies for the game and you have to acknowledge all he has done for so many people through the years. A lot of players got their shot through playing in the WBA and scouts always are around. Right now, there are some nice prospects in the league."

Greenfield also praised the WBA for sponsoring younger division—Mickey Mantle, Connie Mack, Sandy Koufax—spanning age groups from 13 to 18.

"In recent years, there was no place for kids to go after Little League," Greenfield said. "Now, they can go right through to college. The WBA has a great feeder program going. "I'd love to be young again and do it all."

Harry Greenfield can't be young again, but at 46, baseball is still old hat.

1990 Alumni Baseball Game

Among those present at the 1990 alumni baseball game were: Al Paradis, Dennis Lally '89, Al Anderson '89, Mike Goodwin '89, John Jordan, Jeff Day '87, and Glen Carter '85. Over 100 people were present to watch the present Husson team rally to win in the ninth.

Husson baseball coach John Kolasinski '85 (with clipboard) has a lot to smile about as his present players get an opportunity to meet and play against alumni Jeff Day '87, Glen Carter '85, J.K., Mike Goodwin '89, Jeff Wildey '87, Al Paradis, and Al Anderson '89.

Alumni baseball players Mark Farnham, Walt Foster, Bunky Dow '82, Randy Harris '85, (front) Ken Huot '84, and Glenn Megquier '82 had an opportunity to reminisce while playing. After the game, a cookout was enjoyed by players and their families.

1990-91 Annual Fund Campaign

Wilma Bradford, John Bragg, Ed McKenzie '48

Jack Lagerquist '76

The 1990-91 Annual Fund campaign was kicked off officially October 1. Letters to all alumni and friends of the College are asking for increased support to meet the $150,000 goal set by this year's Annual Fund Committee, chaired by Trustee Wilma Bradford. She explains that increased operating costs, enlarging the endowment for scholarships and the improvements required to keep the physical plant in top shape are pressing needs. Her committee set this year's goal 25% higher than last year and are asking for more alumni to lend support. When the books close on this year's effort, 700 alumni are expected to have participated, an increase of 133%.

Leadership guiding the campaign include trustee John Bragg overseeing business support, Jack Lagerquist '76 in charge of alumni and former trustee Ed McKenzie '48 as an at large member of the Annual Fund Committee.

Phonothon to Start November 1

Alumni Past President James Hathorne '68 announced recently that all alumni who do not respond to the Annual Fund drive before November 1 will be phoned by a Husson student or an alumni during a November Phonothon. Hathorne says every effort is being made to encourage as many alumni to lend support to this year's Annual Fund as is possible. He claims that alumni can put the effort over the $150,000 goal and that each one will be reminded when called that their gift will be matched this year.

A matching gift fund established through the generosity of an alumnus is challenging all alumni to contribute. Every dollar donated earns an additional 50 cents, so that a gift of $20 becomes a gift of $30, $50 becomes $75 and a gift of $100 becomes $150.

Calls will be made each Monday through Thursday evening beginning November 5, from approximately 6:00 p.m. to 8:30 p.m.
