To The Editor:

Enclosed is my donation to Husson's Alumni's Penobscot Club, which I am sure is desperately needed in these difficult economic times.

By the way, since I left Husson to go back to Pennsylvania in 1971, I ran for political office. This I am sure was the result of having been involved in numerous "Chief Week" elections and activities with ΜΣΧ and supporting candidates for "Chief Week". So, in 1972, at the age of 23, I put some of my "Chief Week" political activities to work in putting together a real political campaign for the Pennsylvania State Legislature. After much hard work, strategic campaigning and some "Chief Week" tactics, I won a seat in the Pennsylvania State Legislature.

Well, I have had the privilege and honor of serving as a Pennsylvania State Legislator for ten consecutive terms. Thanks "Chief Week" experiences!

In closing, let me say a hello to my cherished friends of Husson, and hello to my brothers of ΜΣΧ. I indeed miss the friendship and good times at Husson, especially "Chief Week"

Best Wishes,
George C. Hasay, '71 ΜΣΧ

P.S. As I pack my suitcase to travel to the Capitol each week over my 19 years in the Legislature, I still use the same cloth Husson laundry bag I used at Husson. "Amazing", whomever made those laundry bags sure knew what they were doing!

Husson Enrollment Up By 8 Percent!

With 83 new students in January, Husson College has experienced an 8% growth in enrollment over the spring semester of 1991, according to Husson President William Beardsley. Current enrollment is 887 compared to 817 students at this time last year.

"Faced with fewer students graduating from high school coupled with a recession, we are delighted to be growing," Beardsley said. "Operating at near capacity has enabled us to add faculty and programs without a tuition increase. These investments appear to be paying off," he added.

One area of substantial growth is the Husson/Eastern Maine Medical Center nursing program. Husson has added programs in sport management, paralegal studies, and five-year combination bachelor's/master's degree in accounting.

Retention for the fall semester has improved significantly. "With the recession, we expected to lose students and dorm residents this past fall," said Dean of Student Affairs John Rubino. "In fact, our retention has improved and dorm occupancy has increased."

The Chronicle of Higher Education reports that colleges in the U.S. have had a steadily declining pool of high school graduates from which to draw for the past five years. Latest U.S. Department of Education studies indicate this demographic trend will level out in May of 1992 and will be followed by a 20 percent increase in the number of high school graduates by the year 2000. Beardsley said that Husson experienced growth of more than 10 percent in the past five years and has established a goal of 1,000 students by its centennial in 1998.

New Technology Allows For Home Study

By Ron Knight

Two machines dominate Dennis Stubbs' Griffin Road apartment in Bangor. One is a computer. The other an iron lung. One keeps him breathing while he sleeps, and the other connects him to his teacher and fellow students at Husson College.

Stubbs, known to his many friends and acquaintances as "Denny", has been taking courses at Husson for nearly five years, and will soon receive an associate degree in accounting.

Innately enthusiastic to begin with, Stubbs is especially excited about an experimental computer programming course he is taking from Associate Profession Jesse Baker through the Continuing Education Division.

Confined to a wheelchair by day and nearly completely paralyzed by polio, Stubbs found it difficult and tiring attending classes on campus.

"Travel in winter is tough, so when Professor Baker asked me if I would like to take a programming course over the computer from home I said 'Sure, I'll try it."

Baker says he had people like Stubbs in mind when designing the course--Management Information Systems: Introduction to BASIC.

"If you approach Denny and ask him how he feels about this experiment, does he think he can do it, and he says yes, you buy into that," says Baker. "Because, that's exactly what will happen. He'll do it because he's motivated. If he tackles something, it's going to bear fruit."

Baker says he and Stubbs talked at length about how the strictly computer-generated course should be structured.

"I was trying to stimulate interest in providing an alternative means of teaching handicapped people in the wintertime," says Baker. "It's not always easy for them to come to the school. For some, it's a hell of an undertaking."

Baker explains that students need to have a computer or have access to one. A telephone modem is attached, allowing round-the-clock contact between Baker and students and among the students themselves through a "bulletin board" that they can call up on the computer screen at any time. Tests, scores, lessons and inquiries are all done over the computers.

Stubbs, who in his spare time does income taxes free of charge for low income and other handicapped persons, sees taking courses over a computer as an educational tool of unlimited power.

"I would think that there is a huge audience out there for such courses," he says. "Not just the handicapped, but for mothers at home raising children, for example. Or others who live far from the college, or can't attend class because of their work schedules. It's flexible and adaptive. There are a lot of benefits, and I don't see any deadly pitfalls."

Stubbs says he is lobbying hard to have other courses offered over the computer as he pursues a four-year bachelor's degree. He intends to set up a bookkeeping business at home.

"Denny is an effective person," says Baker. "He has encouraged many other people and helped them to stop feeling sorry for themselves and to get on with their lives. People tend to forget Denny's handicaps, because he's so capable."

Stubbs, 45, who fell victim to polio when he was seven, wastes no time in self-pity. He's too busy.

"We're all dealt certain cards and you play the hand you're dealt the best you can," he says. "You can sit and mope about what you don't have or be thankful for what you do have. There are always people worse off than you."

Alden Trust Challenges Husson Alumni & Friends

The Alden Trust of Worcester, Massachusetts, has promised a grant of $25,000 to Husson's scholarship endowment fund if alumni and friends can raise $50,000 by November 30, 1993. The challenge stipulates that all funds must come from new donors or from increased gifts by regular donors.

The total amount of $75,000 is to be invested by the college to establish the George I. Alden Scholarship Endowment. Eighty percent of the new fund's annual income will be used to support need-based scholarships for Husson students. Remaining interest income will be reinvested with the principal to keep the fund growing.

The challenge grant represents a strong vote of confidence in Husson. In the notification letter to President William Beardsley, Alden Trust Chairman Francis H. Dewey III, stated, "We felt that you had accomplished so much in recent years that we are prepared to grant more than you requested, and we never do that." The original request was for support of student financial aid for $14,000, an amount nearly double the Trust's previous gifts to Husson.

Executive Director of Development, Kenneth Vogt, said the college is very fortunate to have this challenge because it increased awareness on the part of those who have not supported Husson and that it is extremely important that they do so now. He adds that those who loyally provide financial support on an annual basis will now have an incentive to increase the size of their gift.

Vogt points out the unless some very large gifts (over $1,000) are received which can be applied to this challenge, the number of new donations or increased gifts will most probably have to exceed 300 each year to reach the goal of $50,000. That represents a very big challenge for Husson where traditionally the total number of donors each year is in the 600-700 range. Put another way, it means the college will have to see roughly 50% of its faithful donors increase their donations significantly while adding 50% new donors to its honor role of contributors.

In the past year a major effort has been underway to fund new scholarships. Corporations, individuals and foundations have generously replied and scholarships were established to honor the memory of former trustee and alumnus, Roger Castonguay '64; in the name of Webber Oil; to honor the memory of Vivian P. Ward; in the name of the Woodrow W. Cross Agency; to remember Leland Bennett and in honor of Alma C. Williams.

Further gifts to increase these and other established scholarships, however, will not be counted toward the $50,000 goal. The challenge specifies that gifts to already named or established scholarships or gifts established by bequests will not qualify.

However, friends and alumni of Husson who did not donate in the previous academic year (1990-1991) and have not donated during the current year are eligible to be considered new donors. The entire amount of their contribution can be counted to meet the challenge.

Those wishing to contribute or to certify that their gift will qualify may send their checks or inquires to: The Development Office, Husson College, One College Circle, Bangor, ME 04401-9909. Tel 207-947-1121, Ext. 209.

'54 and '66 Lead in Alumni Class Competition

The new competition among alumni classes to claim the top spots in three categories of support for the Annual Fund is heating up. The current leaders are 1954 for most dollars donated ($10,175) and 1966 for most donors (22). The overall leadership (dollars x donors) goes to 1966 (3,496 x 22 donors).

Many other classes are still in the running and class agents and members of the Alumni Annual Fund Committee are urging classmates to send their gifts in before June 30 in order to count in this year's competition. Any gift to the college, unrestricted or earmarked for a special purpose, counts toward a class's total.

Winning classes will be announced next fall in all three categories and honored at Homecoming. Their class numerals will be engraved on brass plates attached to a new plaque hung in the corridor of Peabody Hall.

This year, 1992, marks fifty years since we attended the "school on the hill." To commemorate this significant event, would you like to join with me in making a special gift to Husson College?

We could make a contribution to an existing endowment fund, purchase a piece of furniture for the Alumni Sports Hall of Fame room which is one of the current projects, or make some other specific gift of benefit to the school and a tribute to us as former students. We would like to hear from all of you expressing your ideas for celebrating this very special year.

Your responses may be addressed to Paul Husson or Kenneth Vogt at Husson College, or to me at 164 Cedar Street, Bangor, ME 04401

Annual Fund Setting Records

Defying regional and local fund-raising trends, Husson's Annual Fund has posted significant gains and the current level of support is already the highest in the college's history. Alumni support through January 1992 was running close to 80% ahead of the same time period for 1991 and total dollars donated from all sources was up 165%

Foundation support is leading the way in terms of growth, posting a four fold increase over 1991. Gifts from corporations are close behind with roughly a 366% increase.

Especially gratifying is the trend of increasing dollar amounts from individual alumni. While total number of alumni donors lags behind the record level of last year, the number of larger gifts ($250, $500, $1,000+) is way up. It is this trend which accounts for the significant gain in alumni dollars referred to above. Given our economy's present condition, this is interpreted as a strong vote of confidence in Husson. The Annual Fund has just passed the $215,000 level and is growing daily.

Three New Scholarships Endowed

Adding to the growing list of named scholarships are three newly established need-based financial aid endowments for Husson students. A former Husson administrator, a long time friend of the college, and an alumnus have each chosen to support the college and its financially deserving students in this manner.

Former Dean of Nursing, Mary Bennett Williams, has established the Leland R. Bennett Memorial Scholarship which will provide need-based financial assistance to non-traditional students in the nursing program. Any adult learner qualifying for financial assistance entering the nursing program will be eligible for the award.

Oliver Ward '65 has established the Vivian P. Ward Scholarship to be awarded annually to a returning second year Business Education student. It will be announced each year after first semester grades have been posted and will honor the freshman Business Education student with the highest grade point average who qualifies for financial assistance and will be returning the following year.

One of Husson's long time friends, Alma C. Williams, has provided endowment funding in her name to offer financial aid each year to a returning student who successfully completed his or her first year at Husson. The need-based financial award must go to a student from Clifton, Amherst, Holden, Eddington, Aurora, Great Pond, Osborn or Dedham.

As reported in the last issue of The Ledger (Fall 1991) Husson has been encouraging gifts of scholarship endowment funds to support a growing population of students requring larger financial support in order to attend. In reponse to the need expressed in those articles, these new endowments are especially timely and deeply appreciated by the college.

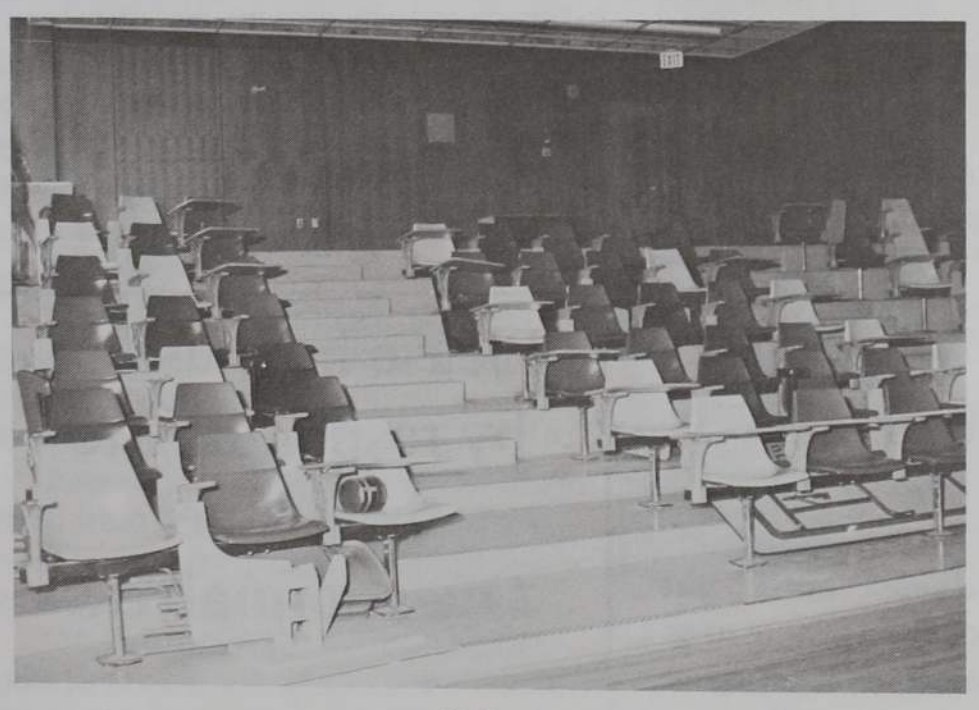

Those wishing to add their own support for scholarship aid should read the accompanying article (see next page) on Alden Trust's $25,000 challenge grant encouraging new and increased gifts to establish a $75,000 scholarship endowment.

Major Gift Supports Auditorium Renovation and Technology at Husson

The Maine Community Foundation through its Sawyer Family Fund recently contributed $50,000 to Husson to be equally divided to support the renovation of Kominsky Auditorium and to establish the Sawyer Computer Laboratory. This major gift was initiated by Husson trustee, W. Tom Sawyer.

In responding to the announcement of the gift, President William H. Beardsley thanked Sawyer for his ongoing support and for his "numerous intellectual and business contributions as a trustee." He noted that Sawyer's gift was the largest the college has received in recent years and that his variety of personal and financial contributions to the college make him "a cherished friend of the college."

The Maine Community Foundation includes numerous individual funds like the Sawyer Family Fund where donors retain the right to make recommendations to MCF directors from time to time on how the income is spent. There are dozens of these advised funds, some of which are unrestricted, some for areas of special interest and some for designated purposes.

Before

After

Kominsky Auditorium has undergone some recent renovations including a new hardwood floor in the stage area, new lighting and ceiling, carpeting, theatre style seating and a drapery style backdrop. These renovations were made possible by donations from friends of the College including alumni, former Trustees, employees and local businesses (see article above). Repairs on the heating/cooling systems are planned for the summer and long-range plans include new materials for the walls.

I.C.L.S. Celebrates 15 Years at Husson

By Rob Juckett
ICLS Instructor

April of 1992 marks the 15th anniversary of the International Center for Language Studies on the Husson College campus. Students from most every region of the world have come to ICLS to study English as a Second Language (ESL) in the Intensive Program offered in Bangor.

The ICLS Program has nine levels of instruction in which students are taught speaking, listening, reading, and writing. Some students arrive at Husson with little or no knowledge of English, while others arrive having already gained a high degree of proficiency in the language. All are instructed according to their individual needs.

The average student resides on the Husson campus for three or four months, attending class five hours a day, five days a week. The program operates 51 weeks a year. A large number of students go on to undergraduate or graduate work at Husson or at other colleges and universities in the U.S.

In its 15 years of operation ICLS has greeted students, both young and old, from more than 60 countries around the world. And the list of countries, like the number of flags decorating Dickerman Dining Commons, continues to grow.

Early in 1977 Serge Belanger, the Founder and President of the International Center for Language Studies in Washington, D.C., made arrangements with the late Franklin Peters, who was President of Husson College at the time, to open a branch school on the Bangor campus. Several factors led to Mr. Belanger's decision: Bangor has an international airport, easily accessible from Boston or New York; Husson has modern residence halls, complete athletic facilities, and a language laboratory; the City of Bangor was a welcome option for students at a time when most ESL programs were in big cities; and the economy of the area allowed him to keep prices low for the students and costs low for the school. But perhaps the major factor in the decision to locate in Maine was the fact that Husson College wanted ICLS here. ICLS presented Husson with an opportunity to add an international character to its campus. President Peters did not let the opportunity pass.

On April 11, 1977, the first ICLS classes were held at Husson College. There were three students enrolled, a staff of two teachers, and the Director. Almost immediately the number of students began to grow. The summer of 1977 and all of 1978 saw a sudden influx of young Iranians into the United States as a result of the revolution in their country. ICLS enrollment increased substantially and the staff was expanded.

The student body at ICLS has always been diverse. Over the years the majority of foreign students on Husson's campus has come from the Far-East, the Middle-East, and Latin America. Between 1977 and 1985 Mr. Belanger also opened ESL schools in Bahrain and in Houston, Texas.

In November of 1985 Husson's then President Merrill and Mr. Belanger came to an agreement to transfer ownership of the ICLS Program to Husson College. President William Beardsley has often voiced his hopes and intentions of maximizing the international atmosphere at Husson College, saying that an understanding of the growing international character of business is more crucial today than ever before.

ICLS is more than an academic endeavor; it is a social, intercultural experience. As an integral part of the Husson community ICLS has had a profound impact on many American students. The ICLS experience has led to many lifelong, long-distance friendships, travel abroad, overseas work experience, and, in several instances, love and marriage. But perhaps the most significant contribution ICLS has made during its 15 years at Husson College has been an increased awareness and understanding of how much alike we all are whether we hail from Bangor, Maine, or from one of those faraway countries we studied in sixth-grade geography. This awareness has given us the rare ability to see through the diversity of cultures, and it supports the notion that once you overcome the language barrier everything else falls right into place.

The Husson Community welcomes Leo Loiselle and looks forward to working with him in the future for the good of the College. As a member of the Husson Alumni Association, he has been a friend of the College for some time and we hope he will enjoy this new role as Trustee.

Husson Holds Line on Tuition

Husson trustees voted a zero increase in board, room, and tuition fees for the 1992-1993 academic year at their Winter Board Meeting. "For many of us this is an answer to our prayers," said student trustee, Ed Vazquez '93. This decision will affect close to 900 day division students on the Bangor campus. The trustees also approved the addition of faculty.

"Maine family income is dead in the water," said Board Chairman, Richard Dyke '58 ΜΣΧ. "Our students face tight family budgets and a rough job market. With increased enrollment and operational efficiencies, we have concluded that Husson can hold the line on pricing for one year, while simultaneously making strategic campus improvements and adding key faculty positions," said Dyke.

The board also approved the addition of three faculty in nursing, plus new positions in sport management, liberal studies, and medical assisting.

Husson tuition will remain at $7,320 for the 1992-1993 academic year. A large percentage of the student body receives some form of financial assistance including federal Pell grants, Stafford loans, and work study, plus state and institutional grants. Board and room fees at $3,570-$3,770 are among the lowest in the state.

A decision on continuing education and graduate tuition for 1,100 part-time students in Portland, Lewiston, Caribou, and Bangor will be made at a later date.

We will meet John Boucher, new Board of Trustee member, in the next issue of The Ledger.

Woody Ran Tourney With Maestro's Touch

By Ron Brown

Bangor Daily News

High school basketball lost a good friend last week when Woody Bailey ' 37 passed away.

It is sadly ironic that he died at the beginning of a new high school basketball season, a time when the hopes and dreams of coaches and players in Eastern Maine are already focused on the February happenings at the Bangor Auditorium.

It was the sports extravaganza known as the Eastern Maine Schoolboy and Schoolgirl Tournaments in which Woodrow F. Bailey made his mark.

As the Maine Secondary School Principal Association's director of this most-celebrated of athletic activities for more than 45 years, Woody Bailey conducted the proceedings with a quiet dignity that endeared him to players, coaches and officials alike.

As a former basketball coach, he understood the significance of bringing a team to the high school tournament. He knew that in most parts of our region, a post-season appearance in Bangor was akin to a pilgrimage.

The auditorium has become a mecca of sorts, the final stop on a journey that begins in so many small towns when the leaves change color and the smell of wood smoke is in the air.

As a retired referee, Woody knew what center stage represented to the men and women who had toiled for months in the relative obscurity of isolated gyms, only to find themselves thrust into the limelight of a big game in Bangor.

And as a basketball fan, he knew that life literally stops during tournament week for thousands of people who make the long trek to the Queen City to watch their local heroes perform.

He conducted the proceedings like a maestro extraordinaire, lending his years of experience to an orchestra of dedicated men and women from public education who devoted so much time to ensure that the tournament would be a smooth-running operation.

During those 45 years, Woody Bailey and his crew would witness the record-breaking performances of a kid named Birney from Cony High School on a snowy February night, when 52 points dropped through the auditorium nets.

He would see a young man from Caribou named Thurston launch a half-court shot with a flick of his wrist that transformed a quiet Aroostook County town into a hub of bedlam.

He would see the likes of such legendary coaches as Barry and Wentworth do epic battles on a floor that can only be paralleled in New England sports history by the parquet surface of the Boston Garden.

A future senator would play there, and so would a future governor. Dignitaries would come and go, enjoying the proceedings as much as the throngs of youngsters who donning school colors from head to toe, paraded their stuff throughout the hallowed halls of the old building on Dutton Street.

As he quietly directed it all, Woody Bailey stood for everything that is right and good about education and the extracurricular activities that have become such an important part of our winter lives in this state.

I am proud to have shared a few moments with Woody Bailey during each tournament week. He was loved by many, and he will be sorely missed by all who knew him.

Men's Basketball...

A Season to Remember

The Husson men recently completed their 1992 season. The bad news was that they lost to St. Joseph's (84-76) in the District Tournament, but the good news was received shortly thereafter when they were awarded one of the three at-large bids to the national championship.

The Braves had a great year with a 26-9 record earned by defeating some tough opponents. Husson and St. Joseph's actually met three times and only three points separated the teams in those meetings. Victories during the season included games with teams like University of Southern Maine, Colby, and the University of Maine at Machias.

Team statistics include:

- Nine games with nationally ranked opponents
- 2nd most wins in NAIA Div. II
- Ranked 15 in the National NAIA Div. II

Coach MacGregor has taken six teams to the national tournament and has the fifth best winning percentage in the country of all active coaches.

Husson Basketball—it was another great year for players and fans alike.

National Tournament Wrap-Up

The Husson College Men's Basketball team obtained a second life when it was selected as an at-large team to play in the NAIA Division II National Tournament at Tarleton University in Stephenville, Texas. This marked the sixth time Husson has played in the national and the third time in the last four years.

Years from now a trivia buff may be asking who won the first game ever played at the NAIA Division II Men's Basketball Tournament. The answer will always be Husson College of Bangor, Maine.

The Braves made the most of their second chance as they defeated 15th-ranked Philadelphia Pharmacy who brought in a 26-6 record by a score of 82-68. As a result of this victory the Braves entered the Sweet Sixteen of the tournament.

Husson was led by its powerful inside game in the form of Brian Burrell. The 6'8" senior had a game high of 19 points, 13 rebounds and 3 blocked shots. Raymond Alley added 17 points while Scott Brown scored 16 points.

The Braves next met 3rd-ranked Franklin College of Indiana. The highly regarded Franklin team found the Husson team playing at its best. Husson came tantalizingly close (85-82) to pulling off a major upset in this highly contested national game. Once again Brian Burrell was outstanding as he scored 27 points, pulled down 12 rebounds, and blocked 3 shots.

Rich Mazurek finished with 17 points and Scott Brown added 10 for the Green and White.

Coach MacGregor expressed pride in the Braves effort. He stated, "Our team's effort was monumental, and with a little luck we'd be moving on to the final 8 right now."

Interestingly, the eventual National Champion, Grace College of Indiana, had been beaten twice during the season by this same Franklin Team. Returning players realized the significance of their performance and have set their sights on next year's season as they now realize the level of play that they can obtain.

Sports Notes

- D. Bruce MacGregor, head coach of the men's basketball team and NAIA District 5 chairman, was named 1991-1992 NAIA New England Administrator of the Year.

- Brian Burrell, senior co-captain of the men's basketball squad, was named to the NAIA National Division II Men's Basketball All-Tournament Team. Burrell, a Washington D.C. native, was also named the 1991-92 WMAC Player of the Year.

- Buster Frederick '90 was honored in February by having his uniform (#50) retired. Frederick, who led Husson to the NAIA Nationals in 1989 and '90, is only the second player in Brave's history to have his number retired.

- Mary "Kissy" Walker, head coach of the women's basketball team, was selected as NAIA District 5 Coach of the Year. She was also named MAIAW Co-Coach of the Year.

- Bill Ashby, who guided the Husson College soccer team to their first NAIA District Eastern Division playoff appearance since 1986, was named Western Maine Athletic Conference Coach of the Year. Husson soccer players Jason Hill, Chris Steppe, Gary Thompson, and Phil Byra were named to the all-WMAC squad.

Women's Basketball... The Tradition Continues

The Husson women's team recently concluded another successful season in which they were once again among the national rankings for their division with an overall record of 23-5. They were named Western Maine Athletic Conference Champions with their conference record of 8-0, finished the season as District 5 runners-up, and were ranked as the number two team in the State.

Two players, Vicki Mazerall and Stephanie Lebel were named to the All District 5 team and the All Tourney team.

Leading scorers were Anne Cote, average 13.1 points per game, and Stephanie Lebel, average 15.6 points per game. Stephanie was also our top rebounder, averaging 8 per game. Vicki Mazerall finished the season with the most assists and steals per game.

The Braves will be looking forward to another great year in '93 with an experienced team as they will only lose one senior, Vicki Mazerall.

Vicki has been an important part of the Husson team throughout her playing career. Her accomplishments include:

1989-90 WMAC Rookie of the Year
MAIAW Rookie of the Year
1990-91 Paul Bunyan MVP
MAIAW Best Average in Steals (3.6)
1992 All District 5 Team
All Tourney MVP
MAIAW Best Average for Steals (4.0)

Career Stats: Points 763; Rebounds 278; Assists 250; Steals 334.

Nursing Internship

In the Summer of 1992, 22 nursing students in the Husson College/EMMC Nursing Program, will be placed in Nursing Internships as far south as Portland and as far north as Calais and Caribou. This senior nursing elective involves an academic experience which awards students credit, renumeration and clinical opportunities.

The Nursing Internship, now in its seventh year, was designed using the nationally recognized Northeastern University cooperative education model. During the experience, nursing students are assigned to registered nurse role models in health care systems within and outside the State of Maine. They are also assigned to faculty advisors in the Husson College/EMMC Nursing Program.

As one of their course requirements, students develop a clinically based nursing project that will be useful in health care delivery. Tammy Tozier, a graduating senior, developed standards for nurses to use when caring for a patient with multiple sclerosis. Dory Peckham developed a discharge teaching pamphlet for patients following a renal biopsy. Jody Merrill developed a teaching pamphlet to be used for patients with chest tubes.

Lisa Grant described this experience as one "which definitely gave me the opportunity to gained more experience in obtaining information from patients in a professional manner. Additionally, the Nursing Internship gave me an added opportunity to practice nursing skills."

From a faculty perspective, Director of the Nursing Internship, Monica M. Collins, RNC, MS has seen demonstrated growth and development in the nursing students as a result of this course. "Students, under the wise guidance of their faculty and role models, enhance their organizational skills and self-confidence in their nursing competence. Students also gain an appreciation for the challenges and opportunities presented in our wonderful nursing profession."

Schools Failing to Curb Abuse
Face a Possible Shut-Off
Of the Federal Money Tap

By Michael Seltz
Staff Reporter of the Wall Street Journal

Tim Nelson has fond memories of his four years at Husson College in Bangor, Maine. But long talks with professors and moments of quiet contemplation aren't what he remembers most.

What trips to mind is the annual fraternity bash where students got stinking drunk on a "secret potion" called the Green Machine, rumored to contain "lime sherbert and lots of vodka," certainly lots of vodka. Recalls Mr. Nelson, class of '85: "It was just like Animal House."

He might not recognize old Husson today. Forces have converged to dry the place out.

The dormitory director shut down last year's party an hour or so after it began because kids were drinking in the hallways, in violation of the rules. Rob Kurtz, a Husson senior and a fraternity brother of Mr. Nelson in Kappa Delta Phi, says "There's no drinking allowed in the frat lounge or at the Arrowhead," a bar in the basement of Mr. Nelson's old dorm that now serves only soft drinks.

Desperate Acts

Nowadays, says Mr. Kurtz, "A lot of kids sit around and watch TV on Saturday nights. Some people are actually studying. It's getting really boring."

The party's over (at least under attack) at many colleges and universities, and federal money is one of the reasons temperance is fianally getting the upper hand. Husson is a private, nonsectarian school, which like most schools benefits from federal student-loan money.

The federal Drug-Free Schools and Campuses Act, which took effect last year orders the nation's 10,000 institutions of higher learning to adopt drug and alcohol policies discouraging abuse. Schools that don't comply risk losing federal funds, but nobody has been cut off yet.

Because of the threat, "university officials can no longer afford to look the other way" about underage drinking, says Patricia Terrell, dean of students at Southern Methodist University in Dallas. The sobermindedness is buttressed, of course, by other concerns—about highway deaths, about alcoholism, about the health effects of drinking too much, about liability suits and campus insurance premiums. Drinking has lost some of its cachet in society, with wine and spirit sales down about 15% in the past five years...

A Message From Our President...

Editor's Note: This presentation was given to the Bangor Rotary by Husson President William Beardsley on February 18, 1992.

This presentation is about Husson: Its past, where it is today, and the challenges that lie ahead.

One's origins do not limit vision or opportunity, but they tell us a lot about anatomy and character. Husson College is no exception. Let's look into its origins.

In 1898, Frank Shaw started the Shaw Business College in the Bass Building in downtown Bangor. When my grandmother attended at the turn of the century, a student could start any Monday. In 1925, the College moved to what is now the Peoples Heritage Bank parking lot on Columbia Street, and was described by a student as follows:

> "The classrooms, four in number, were located on the second floor of a dark factory and mercantile building. The lighting was extremely poor. Ventilation was lacking... The equipment was antiquated and meager...

Husson provided a basic business education. The college was "for profit" and did not offer degrees. In 1940, president and owner, Chesley Husson, built a new education facility and the college moved to Park Street Hill.

In 1952, a young man from Wilton, by the name of Dick Dyke, arrived at Husson and decided he wanted more than an education. He also wanted a degree, so he and his friends piled into a car and drove to Showhegan and knocked on the door of Margaret Chase Smith, not realizing that college degrees were outside the jurisdiction of Maine's congresswoman. She made an appointment for them to meet the governor. And to make a long story short, in 1953, Husson was authorized to grant a baccalaureate degree by the Maine Legislature. Recently Mr. Dyke spoke to 120 Husson employees as Husson's new chairman of the board. He spoke of ethics, family business, globalization and the same "can do" attitude he displayed as a student in the 1950's.

Still "for profit," Chesley Husson realized that for the college to gain academic stature, it would have to go "non-profit." Thus, in 1964, this Bangor entrepreneur converted his personal wealth into the private, non-profit Husson College we know today.

He then set out to accomplish a final dream, to build a campus. During the 1960's, the college purchased the Hillman dairy farm and abutting property on outer Broadway. It borrowed $7 million of federal funds, and with considerable support from the Bangor business community, built the campus you see today. "Chief" Husson, as he was called, saw the opening of the present campus in 1969, only to pass away the following year.

The early 1970's were like a cold shower for Husson. G.I.'s and others who had caused Husson's enrollment to surge during the Vietnam War, vanished overnight and by 1974, enrollments had collapsed to below 500. But for dedicated, quality teachers like Bill Donahue, Bill Curran, Janet Kinney, Charles Sullivan and loyal friends and trustees, the College might not have survived. Land was sold for needed cash, while debt and accounts receivable grew. The small, low income student body was unable to support the 350,000 square feet of facilities and $8 million of debt. One dorm was leased to Job Corps as an ingenious social/academic experiment in 1979; the extra revenue plowed into academics. Husson became regionally accredited, added a continuing education program, a graduate program in business, and joined forces with EMMC to start a BSN program.

Quality faculty were hired and enrollment rose to 750, yet, finances remained a problem and net debt (informally defined as debt less endowment) peaked at $8.5 million in 1986. Early the next year, banks said they wanted out. The feds, seeking cash, wanted to get rid of their old 3% notes and the regional accrediting agency, smarting from recent failures at Ricker and Nasson Colleges, expressed concern about Husson's financial viability.

What happened next was very special. Doug Brown and Dick Dyke invited me to the Cumberland Club in Portland and basically looked at each other and said, "Let's do it." Tom Sawyer was next, then the Braggs, Lloyd Willey, Peirce Webber, George Peabody, Barbara Cassidy, Robert Flynn, Leon Williams, Norman Kominsky, and the list goes on. Mal Jones stepped forward and said Bangor Savings Bank would refinance the residual debt and "besides," he said, "my cat uses Husson's pine lot as a litter box." The feds discounted their 3% note for cash and, to make a long story short, in a matter of six months Husson College reduced its debt to under $3million and earned its first surplus in years.

Today, Husson's net debt is zero, day division enrollment is close to 900, up 8% from just last year, and the college has a state-wide presence, including 400 graduate and undergraduate students in Portland, 100 students in Lewiston, and 100 in Caribou. We educate more Maine students than Bowdoin, Bates, Colby, College of the Atlantic, and Unity combined.

That's the background. Now lets answer some important questions: Why is Husson the fastest growing college in Maine? How is it that Husson is hiring faculty? Why is Husson running a surplus while schools from Yale to Bowdoin are running in debt? How is it that Husson can compete with the University of Maine where students pay one-half what it costs to attend Husson? There are no simple answers but a few case studies might help.

Take Accounting. Husson has small classes. We pack in more accounting courses than any other school in Northern New England; 42 credit hours, twice the concentration in some other colleges. We also require 18 hours of English. We emphasize practice rather than theory. We emphasize internships from local accounting firms to IBM, and we pride ourselves in having faculty, like Dewey Martin, who is both academically and professionally credentialed and up-to-date because he has his own practice. Dewey is tough, but he also takes students to Boston to experience the large city and the fine arts. Ken Hews, Leo Loiselle, accountants and executives across the state are testament to the viability of our accounting program.

Take Nursing. Our BSN in nursing is a joint Husson/EMMC degree. The program is heavily moored in extensive clinical experience. The faculty are credentialed from B.U., B.C., Cornell, Columbia, Yale and many other fine institutions and they, themselves, practice what they teach.

...Husson: Past, Present, Future

While more students are from Maine, they also come from as far away as the Marshall Islands and Ukraine. In May of 1992, six nursing students will be interning in Galway, Ireland. In the past they have interned in public health in Kingston, Jamaica. This spring 100% of the nursing graduates passed the NCLEX exam, the nursing equivalent of the CPA exam, the only college in the state with such a record. Nursing is a premier program.

Take Court Reporting. Not only do our students perfect skills that allow a simultaneous record of court proceedings, but they are also students of law, anatomy and physiology, economics, the social sciences and literature as well. In 1991 all of the court reporting graduates were placed in fields related to their profession with starting salaries as high as the mid 30's.

Take Business Education. In 1990-91, Maine's principal, vocational and business teachers of the year were all Husson graduates.

Take Athletics. There isn't a better place in Maine to play ball. I believe Bruce MacGregor is the winningest active college coach in New England and if we could only have persuaded Rudy Keeling of UM to scrimmage Husson a couple of times this winter, Bruce just might have hit his 500th college win. We have also dealt with sex equity in sports, with Pam Hennessey as A.D. and equal scholarships for men's and women's teams, not to mention that the coach of our men's golf team is Maine's past women's golf champion, Julie Green.

Take Our Mission. In 1898, Founder Frank Shaw wrote:

> "Every individual should have his chance to develop sufficiently the skills needed to provide for a better way of life. . . and no student should be denied such an opportunity because of financial straits or limited formal educational opportunities."

The college has been unwavering in that philosophy ever since.

* Husson offers strong liberal arts foundations but it has remained a career oriented professional college to this day.

* From 1898 to today, the majority of Husson students represent the first generation in their family to attend college. This is true for the 85% of the student body from Maine and it is true for the 8% who are foreign or ethnic minorities.

* Husson has always had a liberal admissions policy for students who demonstrate potential. We have strong advising, tutoring and retention programs and every May at commencement, we see testament to our belief.

* Husson has always kept its fees within reach of all Maine people. The college has extensive loan, grant and work-study programs. Personal income of our students' families declined in 1991 and, in response, the board of trustees voted a zero increase in fees for 1992/93. The logic was simple:

1. The students could not pay an increase and

2. Husson's finances improve with growth, not pricing, under current market conditions.

The fact that the average annual family income of students attending Husson is only $27,000 demonstrates the college commitment to access.

Finally, what are the challenges that lie ahead?

* We have introduced a five-year B.S. in Accounting/Masters in Business degree to stay abreast of future CPA requirements.

* We are exploring new technology for the campus.

* We are developing collaborative efforts with other institutions. For example, our health dean, Dr. Julian Haynes serves as Director of the Harvard Geriatric Institute's Rural Health Education Project.

* We are introducing new academic concentrations in sport management and paralegal studies and investigating new areas in health to meet changing market demand. Let us focus on just one area, however, that of globalization, for if we are to serve Bangor and Maine, we, too, must internationalize.

We have done a lot already.

* Over 10% of our dorm residents are from abroad.

* In the recent past we have taught business practices to 30 Guatamalan entrepreneurs, on campus, in Spanish.

* UM engineering students have come to Husson to study Japanese.

* Our ICLS program provides intensive English to over 100 students each year, including 20 Patagonians this winter.

* With 40 Japanese students, we have a very positive balance of trade.

* We have formal articulation agreements with Bunsai Gakuen College in Japan.

But there are also structural changes we must address in the classroom.

* In less than eleven months, Western Europe becomes the largest single economic system in the world. Our students must understand the ramifications.

* Closer to home, consider our local economy:

Bangor International Airport survives on foreign carriers;
Irving Oil and Timber are Canadian;
7-11 is Japanese;
Bangor Mall prospers on Canadian trade;
Lemforder is German;
Madison Paper is Finnish;
Bowater is British.

A single anecdote about Bowater illustrates the point.

Back in 1968, as a self confident graduate student, I met with Bowater's vice president of international forest lands at Bowater House in London. "Mr. Culver," I asked, "How can Bowater cost justify planting spruce in Scotland on a 70 year rotation?"

"Young man," he responded, "England was all but brought to its knees during the last war, not for lack of scones or petrol, but for lack of paper."

No textbook or professor of mine had ever prepared me for Bowater logic. Just such preceptions are being superimposed on Maine's economy today and one of the most exciting challenges for Husson and other educational institutions is to prepare new graduates for just such a world.

In closing, Husson and Bangor have come a long way together. Those of you in this room, among others, have played a major role in what we have become and together there are new challenges to conquer.

Irene Shannon Honored With Jefferson Award

Five Maine citizens were honored on Thursday, March 5, for their dedication to public service by WLBZ-TV and the American Institute for Public Service.

The American Institute for Public Service was founded to honor the best in public service in our country and to develop new leadership. Five categories were created to recognize the dedication, sacrifice and accomplishments of individuals serving the American people. They are for the Greatest Public Service:

- •Performed by an Elected or Appointed Official
- •Performed by a Private Citizen
- •Benefiting the Disadvantaged
- •Performed by an Individual 35 Years or Under

And for the category that WLBZ-TV participates in: Outstanding Public Service Benefiting Local Communities.

This year's annual Jefferson Awards for eastern, central and northern Maine, were presented at a reception at the Bangor-Brewer YWCA, in Bangor. The 1992 recipients are: Evelyn Bowman of Skowhegan; Grace LaBonte of Waterville; Winston Pullen of Orono; Irene Shannon of Bangor; and Robert Quinn of Bangor.

During the month of January, WLBZ accepted nominations for the people who performed tremendous community services on either a voluntary or professional basis. The Jefferson Awards are presented to people who do what it takes to make the towns and cities a better place to live--and who do so largely without recognition.

WLBZ-TV's winners were chosen from a distinguished collection of 166 nominations. This year's judges were: Nancy Adams of Ellsworth; Eunice Rescott of Bangor and John Howard of Orrington.

Irene Shannon...

WLBZ-TV honors Bangor's Irene D. Shannon, RWMS, with a 1992 Jefferson Award for her outstanding achievements in the field of healthcare and community service.

From nurse, nursing educator and Director of Eastern Maine Medical Center's School of Nursing, to her leadership roles in their alumnae association and the Maine State Board of Nursing, Irene has been a staunch supporter of excellence in health care throughout eastern Maine. Her vision and hard work have helped to develop the present program of baccalaureate nursing at Husson College.

Irene is well known for her generosity to her students. Tuition....uniforms....instruction.... whatever the need, Irene would be close by, helping in any way possible.

She has been a dedicated volunteer for many organizations. Irene was the first woman appointed to the Salvation Army's Board of Directors and has served as its Chairperson. Her service with this group includes work at the local soup kitchen, the Angel Tree and Kettle Drive during the holidays, and even general office help when needed.

She has been very active in the Senior Citizen's organization, and was president of the local chapter of the A.A.R.P. Their motto: "To Serve and Not Be Served," is also a statement that best describes Irene. She has been very involved in arranging various social activities for area seniors, and has worked hard to initiate legislation that benefits Maine's and our country's older Americans.

As part of the Retired Senior Volunteer Program, Irene has helped the United Way, and is currently a dedicated volunteer at Telecare, a service of EMMC, which provides daily telephone contact to elderly individuals or other shut-ins.

Irene Shannon does not merely see a need and then "pass by on the other side," but like the Good Samaritan, she involves herself and is a generous participant in the solution.

Channel Two honors this unsung heroe with a 1992 Jefferson Award.

Lindon E. Christie, Jr.

Outstanding Food Donor Award Named After Robert E. Dunton '65

The Good Shepherd Food Bank recently announced the award of the newly created Robert E. Dunton Award to Hannaford Bros. Co., northern New England's largest food retailer and parent firm of Maine's Shop 'n Save Supermarkets and Welby Super Drug Stores.

"The Robert E. Dunton Outstanding Donor, of the Year Award, to be given to a private donor annually recognizes private sector involvement in meeting the needs of the hungry. The award recognizes not only the quantity of food donated, but, equally important, the quality, consistency and care of the donor's involvement with the food bank," said JoAnn Pike, the food bank's executive director.

Headquartered in Lewiston, Me, the Good Shepherd Food Bank distributed nearly $4 million worth of donated food in 1990 to Maine and other New England food pantries and organizations involved in distributing food to the needy. The organization, which is celebrating its tenth anniversary, currently employs full-time people and more than 50 volunteers. The food bank helps to feed over 25,000 people each week. The bank receives no government funding and depends ont he support of the communities it serves throughout the state of Maine.

"The outstanding donor award is named after Robert E. Dunton '65, a senior vice president at Hannaford, who has been critical to the Food Bank's growth. He is largely responsible for the Food Bank's present success. He has gone to bat for us, vouching for our capabilities and giving potential food donors the confidence they need to entrust their product to us. From the time he began working with us eight years ago, Hannaford has been the Good Shepherd Food Bank's most consistent donor and the most supportive advocate, facilitating the contributions of many companies," said Doug Bolles, Chairman of the Food Bank's Board of Directors.

The Good Shepherd Food Banks welcomes donations from private and corporate donors, in the form of financial assistance, food, or services. Please call 772-3554 or write to 415 Lisbon St., Lewiston, Maine 04240.
