CHAPTER FIVE

FACULTY

The faculty of all the business schools in Bangor before 1926, insofar as ascertainable, were educated at proprietary business (commercial) schools. Mr. Shaw, whose formal business training was predicated on the curriculum established by the Bryant, Stratton Chain, employed his own graduates to teach in his several schools. This policy was followed until after World War I.

I

Shaw Business College (Bangor Branch)

1898-1926

Sources for information concerning the faculty of the Bangor branch from 1898 to 1926 have been limited. Entries in the city directories did not always identify the school with which the instructor so listed was employed. It was stated in the Bangor Daily Commercial, 1898, that Mr. Harden would have two assistants.[1] The scanning of many city directories did produce the names of a few teachers identified as instructors at Shaw, in addition to Mr. and Mrs. George D. Harden:

Perley B. Knight, 1907-1910[2]
Fred M. Mitchell, 1907[3]
Bessie J. Kneeland, 1909[4]

In interviews with four Shaw Alumni, several others were recalled. Among them were:

Earl Cunningham (1912-1913)
Mr. Libby (1912)
Mr. Gibbs (1912)

Mr. Harris N. Doe, Founder of Doe Business College (1907-1928), taught at Shaw for a short period of time between his severing relationships with the Bangor Business College and School of Shorthand and Typewriting and the giving of private lessons—independently (1903).[5]

Mr. Harden, a graduate of the Portland Shaw Business College, was manager/principal of the Bangor Branch and Treasurer of the Corporation, until his death, 1915. He was personally responsible for programming students' courses, teaching accounting, supervising the final examination which were administered individually, issuing of the diploma upon the completion of the examination, and placing of graduates for employment. Mrs. Hazel Worth Danforth, Brewer, recalled him with admiration and respect.[6]

One might well assume that there were six to ten instructors during the early 1900s. (See pp. 132, 134.) Who they were or what their educational background was can only be conjectured: for them, as was evident during the first half of the twentieth century, the quality of the instruction was measured primarily by the proficiency of the students "on the job".

Mrs. Harden succeeded her husband as manager-teacher (1915-1921) and continued to teach the shorthand and the typewriting. Miss Ivy Gilpatrick taught bookkeeping, ca 1916-1921; Mrs. Lina K. Sargent, a Shaw graduate also taught at this time. In turn, Mrs. Grace Cannon (1921-1924)[7] and Mrs. Harriet Stroberg (1924-1926)[8] managed the school. Except for a news item in the Bangor Daily News, June 7, 1924, there is no known record of what subjects were taught, by whom, or the number of students enrolled.

Miss Gilpatrick married Mr. Hazen Polk, a Shaw alumnus, in 1921. It is not verifiable whether she continued to teach until the College was purchased by Mr. Mann. Mrs. Grace Cannon was listed in the Bangor City Director, 1925, as a teacher in Brewer High School; neither Mrs. Stroberg nor her husband, a salesman, was listed after 1926.

There were circumstances, both locally and nationally, that affected the status of the College, 1912-1925:

The Bangor Fire (1911)

Proliferation of other business schools locally:
Doe Business College 1907-1928, Beal Business College (Founding date debatable: 1891 (?), 1903-to the present.), Gilman Commercial School (around 1914-1946)

Death of Mr. Shaw (January 10, 1925)[9]

The Mexican Border Incident (1915)

The Passage of the Smith-Hughes Act 1915, 1917

World War I (1914, 1917-1918)

Post War Inflation and Unemployment.

II

Maine School of Commerce, Bangor Branch (MSC-B)

1926-1933

With the purchase of the Bangor Shaw Business School franchise by Mr. Howard W. Mann, the Maine School of Commerce, Bangor Branch (MSC-B) (1926-1933), acquired whatever equipment was on hand at 26-29 Columbia Street. The school continued to occupy the same site until 1940. He employed an entirely new faculty, members of which were Mr. Chesley H. Husson, BS, Salem (Massachusetts) State Teachers College; Mrs. Marjorie (Runnels) Covell, Gilman School of Commerce (Bangor); Mrs. Freda (Seeley) Metcalf, Auburn Maine School of Commerce. No verifiable data are available as to the educational background of Mr. Mann, other than he was a graduate of Bay Path Institute, Springfield, Massachusetts.

He taught at Bay Path Institute before coming to Auburn, Maine, (1913) to teach commercial (business) subjects. He was head of the Commercial Department, Edward Little High School from 1913 to 1916, at which time he opened the first of his chain of business schools in Auburn: Maine School of Commerce—Auburn Branch.[10] Thus, when he purchased the Bangor branch of Shaw Business College (1926), he had wide experience in business education. Such would be invaluable in the development of the Business Teacher Education Program for secondary instructors.

In 1926, a prospective teacher of secondary business subjects was required to have only one year of training beyond the high school level to be certified to teach in that area.

Early on, Mr. Mann introduced a second year program of study for prospective secondary school business teachers. By 1932 a third year had been adopted. Students could be certified to teach in the business department with either a three- or a two-year diploma.

Insofar as ascertainable, Mr. Husson was the first known business instructor in any of the local proprietary business schools to hold a bachelor's degree in business education. The content of the program of study which he completed at Salem State Teachers College (Massachusetts) (1926) is reflected in the development of the curriculum of the college.

As the demand for business instructors rose, the administrators of the school recognized the opportunity to develop a Business Teacher Education program of study that would result in producing well-trained secondary school business teachers and, at the same time, enrich all other business programs of study offered by the school. Beginning in the early 1930s, instructors with major and minor disciplines, other than business, were added to the faculty.

III
Bangor Maine School of Commerce
(BMSC)
1933 - 1947

The ownership of the school changed in 1933; Mr. Husson continued as the principal, a position to which he had been promoted by Mr. Mann around 1930. He and Mr. Walter L. Linscott were the only full-time instructors for the 1933-34 academic year insofar as verifiable. There may have been part-time teachers, but no record of any has been found. Mrs. Marjorie (Runnels) Covell, Mr. Alton R. Covell, and Miss Elizabeth Collins who were instructors in 1932-1933, returned in1934. As new members were appointed, a concerted effort was exercised to select people having a Bachelor's degree, and a Master's degree particularly if they were to teach liberal studies. Thus, as early as 1933, a course of action was implemented that would eventually lead to the enrichment of all business programs of study by providing courses in liberal studies. In time, up to forty percent of program content would be liberal studies. During the decade of the 1930s, there were five instructors, from time to time, holding either a Bachelor of Arts or a Master of Arts degree.

The physical site remained the same. The permanent records continued to be kept on three-by-five inch cards; some having "Auburn Maine School of Commerce" on them.

Miss Freda Seeley, who married Dr. Metcalf, resigned in 1931 and was replaced by Mrs. Priscilla Crane, a graduate of the Auburn Maine School of Commerce. As the student body increased, additional faculty members were employed—all being better qualified in their major and minor disciplines than their predecessors.

There were major changes in the faculty when the school moved into its own new facility—Commerce Hall, 157 Park Street. Academically, the faculty reflected an advancement professionally. They included:

Principal-teacher Chesley H. Husson, BS, MS
Mr. Wilbur Stanton, BS, MS
Miss Clara L. Swan, BS
Mrs. Anne Bowron, BS, MS
Mrs. Beryl Crosby, BMSC diploma
Dr. Edward Dow, Ph.D. (part-time)

Mr. Alton R. Covell, a graduate of Morgan Business College, Waterville (Thomas Business College since 1913) and Mrs. Majorie (Runnels) Covell, a graduate of Gilman Commercial School, Bangor, were also instructors. They attended summer sessions both at University of Maine and out of state; however, neither ever earned a degree.

World War II seriously curtailed the growth of the school. By 1944-1945, there were only three teachers besides Principal Husson, who taught part-time: Clara L. Swan, BS; Mildred M. Bradford, BMSC diploma; Louise B. Miller, BA, MA. The student body shrank to less than one hundred; all members of the graduating classes, 1944 and 1945, were women: 26 in the former; 12 in the latter. Additional qualified, part-time instructors were employed during the summer sessions to teach those subjects required only in the teacher education program. Otherwise, the regular staff taught the basic business courses, thereby offering students the opportunity to complete their programs of study or to get a head start for the fall semester.

The end of World War II and the opportunities created by the G. I. Bill of Rights brought about a new dimension in the growth of the school. To meet the needs of the students, from an enrollment of under 100 in 1943 to one of nearly 500 in 1946, many additional faculty were employed. The demand for qualified instructors far exceeded the supply. However, as far as possible, qualified teachers were appointed.

IV

Husson College

(1947-1961, Proprietary; 1961-to the present-1983, Nonprofit)

Envisioning the school becoming a specialized institution of collegiate status, Principal Husson changed the name to Husson College, assumed the Presidency, and appointed Miss Clara L. Swan, Executive Director. Using as a nucleus the three instructors—Miss Swan, Miss Bradford, and Mrs. Miller, who had experience at the college—and his brother, George E. P. Husson, Jr., he organized the academic administration into the following departments:

Accounting Department, David Hourin, Acting Head (1947-1948)
Business Administration Department, George E. P. Husson, Jr., Head (1947-1952)
Business Teacher Education Department, Ernest M. Frost, Head (1946-1950)
Secretarial Science Department, Mildred M. Bradford, Head (1947-1970)
English Department, Louise B. Miller, Head (1947-1960); Business Teacher Education Department, (1951-1962)

Mr. William H. Donahue, Jr., was appointed Head of the Accounting Department in 1949, a position he held until his death, 1970. Under his leadership the Accounting Department was recognized as outstanding in the State.

Mr. Husson recognized the need for the coordination and the correlation of courses in liberal studies to ensure a broad scope in content and relevance in sequential course offering. Those academic administrators who did not hold advanced degrees, embarked upon a graduate study program to further their professional careers. Mr. Donahue was the first instructor to become a Certified Public Accountant (CPA).

A Division of Liberal Studies was established to provide courses of a collegiate underclass level (freshman/sophomore) in the humanities, natural sciences, and social sciences. Mrs. Miller was given the responsibility for the development and supervision of this division (1947-1960). Such courses were eventually to constitute fifty percent of the requirement for either a Bachelor of Science degree or an Associate in Science degree. Mr. Richard Cohen headed the Division of Liberal Studies (1961-1969).

The change in the corporate structure (1961) in no way affected the academic staff.

The professional expertise of the faculty kept pace with the advancement of the collegiate status of the institution. The faculty has numbered over sixty at times. Throughout the history of the College there have been part-time personnel: instructors; qualified lecturers in special areas of subject matter; trained coaches for sports; directors for dramatics, glee club, musical units, speech, dance, voice. In fact, Mr. Husson attempted to provide a sponsor—whether a member of the regular staff or an "outsider"—for any activity for which sufficient interest among the students of any given year was evidenced.

As the college grew in institutional status and the student body increased numerically, faculty members of long standing became involved in administrative responsibilities. A Faculty Council was organized in the late 1950s; the first Faculty Handbook was compiled in 1962. (Copies of all handbooks are on file at the College.)

Likewise, as the requirements for renewal of certification of secondary school business teachers were liberalized by the State, the College invited out-of-state professionals to be visiting summer lecturers and to conduct workshops specifically designed for in-service personnel.

Organization within the four departments and the Division of Liberal Studies was modified and expanded to keep pace with the ever-growing complexity of business. Chairpersons were assigned to specific sections within each area requiring a corps of instructors.

In order to meet better the needs of the public, the College throughout the years, periodically conducted evening classes, special summer sessions, workshops, and seminars. With the implementation of the degree Nursing Program an additional segment of professional expertise will be introduced to the academe, fall 1983.

In 1951 an evening division was begun to meet the needs of inservice business personnel. Members of the regular faculty, by and large, were the instructors. Likewise, full-time faculty were largely involved with the extension program held on Dow Air Force Base during the 1950s and early 1960s.

In 1971 President Barkev Kibarian initiated the development of a broader adult education program. The concept of taking the "College" to the people, namely establishing extension programs throughout the State, gave rise to the External Degree program. Its title was changed to Continuing Education and Extension Division (CEED), 1978.

The CEED staff involves some full-time faculty. However, the majority are drawn from the local sites where the programs are offered. They have numbered in the hundreds over the years.[11]

The faculty for the Graduate Division is also made up of qualified teachers who are members of the Day Division. Again, part-time faculty, qualified to teach on the graduate level, supplement the core faculty.

Many full-time faculty members have been involved in student activities. Some are identified and their contributions recognized elsewhere.

Part-time Faculty

From the earliest records of Shaw Business College (parent branch in Portland, Maine) there have been part-time instructors associated with the College. Not too much is known about them before 1933. These part-time teachers were all specialists in the disciplines they taught. Many of them became full-time members of the faculty. Prominent among these was Mr. Walter L. Linscott, BA, MA (1932-1933 part-time; 1933-1936). Having a liberal arts background both on the undergraduate and graduate levels, he was the first known full-time instructor in any of the local business schools to have had such preparation. He was instrumental in the development of the third year of the Business Education Program that received both certification from the State and reciprocal recognition by the School of Education, University of Maine.

There were others. Dr. Edward F. Dow, University of Maine, lecturer in economics, 1942, 1943, became a full-time professor, 1969-1971. Miss Josephine Profita was the first speech instructor whose major in college was the subject she taught. Attorney Edward C. Reynolds, LLM, clerk of the Shaw Business College Corporation lectured on Business Law, Portland (1896-1915). Mr. Howard Foley, Mr. William Cohen (currently United States Senator from the State of Maine), Mr. Jordan I. Kobritz—all attorneys—lectured in Business Law. There have been other part-time instructors in many areas of subject matter. Whenever the need arose, either because of class size or the inclusion of a course related to a business specialty, a part-time instructor was employed. No information has been found to date, concerning instructional personnel for classes other than regular day sessions before 1951. The full-time day instructors also taught summer sessions. The following pages present an alphabetical listing of full-time faculty members, 1926-1983, Day Division; Graduate Division faculty, 1978-1983; Librarians, 1959-1983.[12] Some were initially employed part-time and became full-time instructors; others were full-time and subsequently were on the summer session staff only. Thus, the years of service may not always be indicative of full-time teaching.

LIBRARIANS

Before the Husson College Library was formally established and professional librarians employed (1959), members of the faculty supervised a limited number of reference books and volumes for collateral reading from their own libraries for supplementary work in their courses. Each member of the faculty was entitled to a professional library card at the Bangor Public Library enabling him or her to provide other references for student use. The Bangor Public Library also established and supervised a Reserve Shelf by semesters for the instructors to use. It presented an orientation course in the use of the library for Husson freshmen. All typewriting rooms and rooms in which English classes were taught had copies of Webster's UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY, Third Edition.

The Future Teachers of America (FTA), a collegiate organization for prospective teachers and later identified as Student Education Association (SEA) sponsored the setting up of a specialized business-related library in Commerce Hall. A room, next to the President's office, was set aside for the deposit of acquisitions which were beginning to be made. There were study tables, chairs and a card file; students were on their honor; the President's Office served as a check out station for borrowing books. It was open during school hours. A group picture of the local FTA Chapter, made in the library in 1952, includes many who, as freshmen, were involved in the project.

In 1959, a professional librarian was employed to catalog the collection of books, to organize and to equip the Library, and to develop a program of expansion for the library that would serve adequately all the needs of students of business on the collegiate level.

Since 1968 the Library in Peabody Administration Building, has provided adequate space for shelves, racks, card files, and publications.
