Brewer Teacher Tops in Business Education

by Douglas Kesseli
reprinted by permission of the Bangor Daily News

For years Brewer High School teacher Lynn Brooks '72 ETE has seen what she says is the decline of business education in high schools. Enrollments in these classes all over the state have dropped, and she says there is no mention of business subjects in state mandated list of required courses.

But in her own high school, she said she has worked hard not only to maintain a high level of business education, but improve it. Considering her dedication to a strong business program over the last 16 years in Brewer, it is not surprising that Brooks is the latest recipient of the state Business Educator of the Year Award. The award is presented each fall by the Business Education Association of Maine.

Brooks was not idle when the computer came onto the scene and changed the way people do business, worked and lived. She has updated the business curriculum to include computer accounting, record keeping, and software uses. And she is responsible for what she calls an up-to-date facility at the high school, which includes 45 new IBM computers, a laser printer and 16 other printers.

"I don't know what we'd do without computers," she said recently. Brooks also instituted a class where middle school pupils could get a head start on computers by learning to use the computer keyboard. And through telecommunications instituted by Brooks, Brewer High School students can send their school news into the NEWS to be published in Midweek.

And not forgetting the teachers themselves, she has provided in-service programs for teachers and secretaries in the Brewer School System and at the University of Maine.

But as Brooks and any other teacher will tell you, there is more to teaching that knowing the material well. Part of teaching is inspiring the students to learn, and guiding them along. "If you hold high standards for yourself, they will come to meet theirs," she said.

She has also taken the traditional business class a step further by teaching students about ethics and attitudes. After all, she said, nine out of ten people who are fired don't lose their jobs because they lack the necessary abilities, but because of bad attitudes.

Brooks' support as a teacher extends beyond the classroom. She helps provide guidance and job placement for senior business majors and places them in full-time paid jobs during the school's fourth quarter and after graduation.

In the school from which she graduated in 1967, Brooks wears many hats. She is the business department chairman, business placement director, director of business and computer technology, and advisor to the business club. Other titles could include mentor, motivator and friend.

"If I can't make a difference, that's when I'll retire," she said.

HUSSON ADDS TO STELLAR BOARD

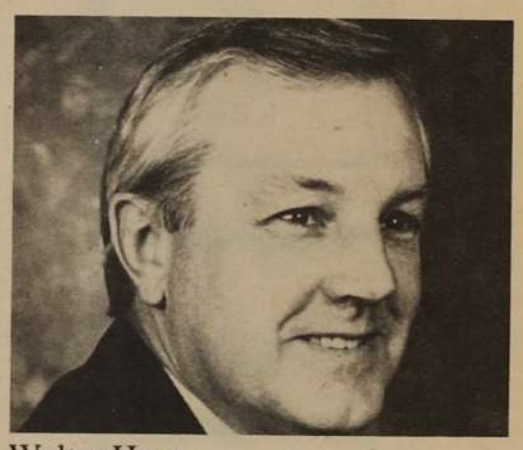

Husson College has further enhanced its Board with the addition of five new trustees at its annual meeting. New Board members include Robert Barrett, III, Director of Prudential-Bache; alumnus Roy Perry, District Director of the United States Small Business Administration in Maine; LaJune Means, Chairman of the Board of Directors of United Bank of Bangor; alumnus Walter Hunt, Vice President of Dead River Company; and alumnus Phillip Buckley, attorney with Rudman and Winchell. Dr. Constance Carlson was reappointed as chairman, and Tom Sawyer was reappointed as vice chairman.

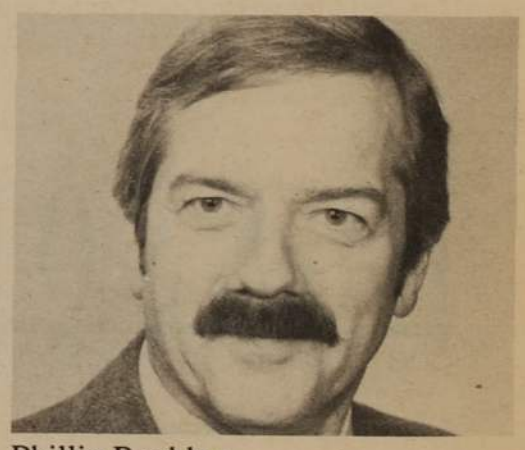

"We are a quality college of business and nursing today, and we are setting our sites on being a first-class business and nursing college for the twenty-first century," stated President William Beardlsey. "We have added international finance and entrepreneurial leadership with these appointments, and we have turned once again to our alumni."

Husson, in its ninety-first year, experienced a 25 percent growth in its entering class this fall. It is laying groundwork for a master plan for the 1990's. "Our goal is to hold enrollment at between 800 and 1000, to keep our focus on business, health and education, and to concentrate on enriching these areas of studies and college life," explained Beardsley. "Our Board of Trustees, at 33 members, is large and constitutes a cadre of outstanding business and education leaders. These practitioners are enabling us to keep pace with the changes in entrepreneurship and health that are going on in Maine today and the ever increasing ties between a graduate's job and new technologies, new administrative challenges and such complex issues as global awareness.

International Education Experienced at Husson

An International Education Task Force has been working since July to develop a statement of purpose that was endorsed by the full Board at the October 30, 1989 meeting. The purpose of international education at Husson is ". . . to ensure that students are adequately prepared for effective, ethical performances in today's global society. . ."

International Education is a broad field of interest which encompasses areas as diverse as study abroad, intracultural experiences and activities, internships, student exchange programs, foreign language study, English-as-a-second-language programs, faculty and staff exchanges, research and teaching of international subject matter and foreign student advising. Husson College is continuing to build on strengths in these areas as public attention focuses on the impact of international trade and the American student's lack of educational preparation for an increasingly interdependent competitive world.

Dr. Janet Kinney, Chairman of the Courtroom, Teacher Education and Office Professions Division, is corresponding with several European colleges concerning compacts between Husson and its counterparts in office administration, court and conference reporting.

President William H. Beardsley is strongly committed to the internationalization of Husson's academic program. He recently stated, "in the area of office administration, we are finding that automation is producing a universal language around the world. Lotus 1-2-3, for example, is not English, Japanese, or Swahili, it is common to every culture that keeps books. The same is true for personnel management and the fundamentals of accounting." Dr. Beardsley attended graduate school at the University of East Africa and also studied in Canada and Sweden. "Husson is already committed to the international community. Our approach isn't so much to study international affairs as to live international affairs, not so much to teach a course in international law as to integrate it into our business law curriculum," stated Dr. Beardsley.

Husson's International Center for Language Studies is in its tenth year. Students from around the world come to the Bangor campus to study English as a second language. Over fifty such students from Japan, Brazil, Canada, Spain, Bolivia, Guatemala, Greece, Thailand, Saudi Arabia and France currently reside in Husson dormitories and share meals and daily activities with their American peers. Thirty-four additional international students are enrolled in undergraduate and graduate programs at Husson. The International Club is active throughout the academic year.

Director Mary Locke, recently announced an expansion of the ICLS program which will offer introductory business language and culture courses in Japanese, French, and Spanish to the general public beginning in January of 1990. All courses will be taught by native speakers of the language. These courses were developed as part of Husson's new emphasis on international education and will prove beneficial to anyone dealing with the international influence within the business world.

Husson is positioning itself to further its image as an international school of business and professional studies.

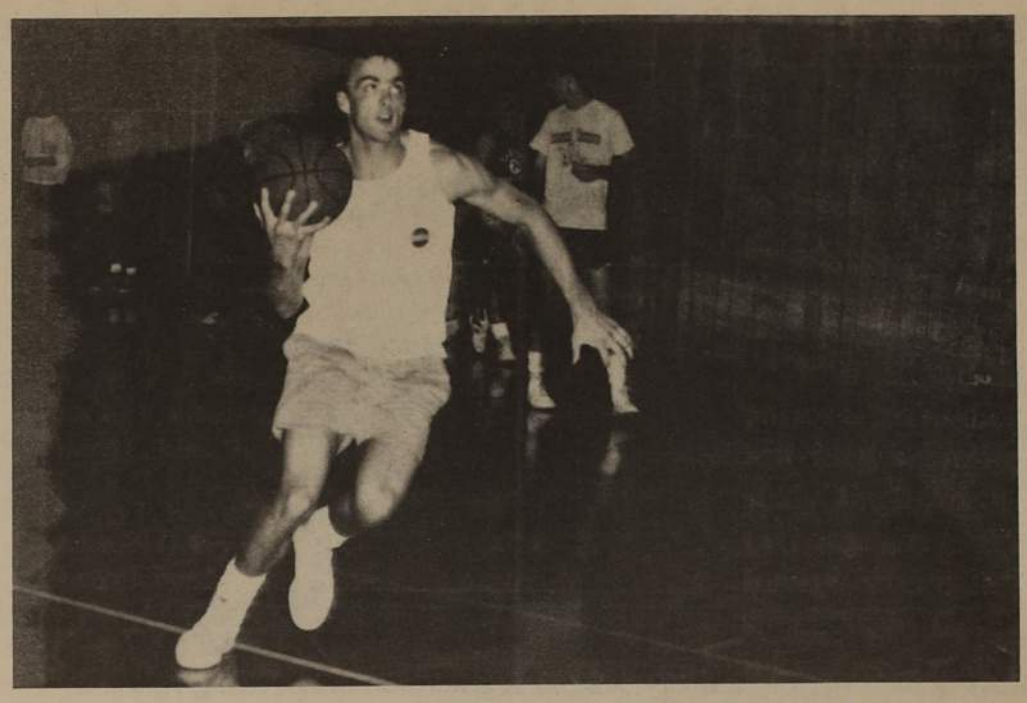

Would You Be A Good Mentor?

Husson alumni remember very well the uncertainties and fears of the transition from student to employee in the "real world". While today's students seem to be modern and sophisticated, they, too, experience the same kinds of questions.

Business graduates face a confusing array of job possibilities: government, commerce, banking, manufacturing, services and others. The choices for nursing, education, office management and other majors are equally diverse.

Any alumni who would be willing to talk with a current student about how your major prepared you for your particular job should contact theCareer Development Office. Perhaps you could explain, over the phone or at your job, the advantages and disadvantages to students considering your line of work. If you are in a position to offer internships or cooperative education jobs, students can get an even better look at their options.

Perhaps as a mentor you can help influence a student's decisions and alleviate some doubts. The Career Development Office hopes to compile a list of grads in various positions and industries who may be willing togive a small amount of their time. Remember, you were once a student too!

Intramurals Are Alive and Well At Husson

How do Husson students relieve stress, forget about their schoolwork and experience the thrill of victory and the agony of defeat? They do it by participating in intramurals.

The intramural program provides Husson students and faculty the opportunity to participate in a wide variety of athletic activities. The growth of the intramural program can be attributed to the efforts of its director Shannon Whiting. "Shannon wears many hats within the athletic and recreation department, but the majority of her time is spent with intramurals," states Pam Hennessey, Director of Athletics.

Whiting has had the opportunity to share ideas and experiences with other college intramural directors. "In comparison, our program far exceeds other colleges of our size in student participation and activities offered," said Whiting. Approximately 85 percent of the male and 40 percent of the female resident students participate in the intramural program. The most popular men's activities are touch football, basketball, and indoor soccer. The most popular women's programs are volleyball and indoor soccer.

"I enjoy participating in intramurals because I can play without feeling the stress of varsity competition," states Dave Roussel, a sophomore soccer player. "It's also a great way to socialize with friends and have fun."

Whiting supplements the traditional intramural program with special events. One evening per semester Husson utilizes the Holiday Health and Racquetball Club for vollyball, racquetball, and pool tournaments. Specialized aerobic classes, taught by Mary Fitzpatrick, are offered to students, faculty and staff. Whiting is also interested in sponsoring a triathalon in the Spring.

Work-study students serve as officials and scorekeepers of all games. "The officials are very important to the success of our program," stated Whiting. "I have excellent people working for me this year." Dave Corbin, a senior from Augusta, accepts the challenge of officiating because "it gets my mind off schoolwork and makes me feel as though I'm contributing to the school in a positive way.

Most of the indoor events take place during the late evening hours. "Through surveys, we have found the best time for students to get here is after their class and study time," states Hennessey. "We also have to work around basketball practices and games, but we all have an equal opportunity to use the gym." With limited success, outdoor Sunday intramurals (football and field hockey) have been implemented.

Greek organizations continue to supply the majority of intramural teams. "I enjoy watching the sororities and fraternities participate in our program," commented Whiting. "They demonstrate a lot of team spirit and comradery." Increased fan support is also more apparent with these organizations.

Another unique element of Husson's intramural program is the involvement of faculty and staff. Teams comprised of Husson personnel compete in selected activities for the same reasons as the students—to relieve stress, to get physical exercise, to socialize, and to win.

Husson Graduate Actively Involved in Fighting World Hunger

by Ron Brown

In 1969, turbulent times ruled the United States. We were a nation at war, a nation with young people moving toward antiestablishment, and a nation struggling to come to grips with itself. When Earl Goodyear '69 graduated from Husson College, he probably never imagined that in twenty years time he would be fighting a different battle--one to save a country from starvation.

Now, as CARE Country Director for the Sudan, Earl Goodyear leads the world-wide effort to stem the tide of death and starvation that to most of us is merely a thirty-second segment on the evening news.

CARE, an international non-profit organization, cooperates with worldwide governments to design and implement relief and development programs. Operating out of its central offices in Khartoum, CARE has launched a multi-million dollar project to resettle over 10,000 people living on the war zone border of south/north Sudan. Relocation for these Sudanese people is not the only problem facing Goodyear and his staff.

"Since July of 1988," states Goodyear, "the Sudan has been besieged by disease, floods, pests, and starvation in biblical proportions." CARE quickly responded to the impending disaster. By allocating $120,000 in emergency funds, Goodyear and his staff have supplied the troubled region with 10,000 square meters of plastic sheeting for temporary shelter, 2,000 blankets, two portable warehouses—each capable of storing 500 tons of food and supplies, and associated life-saving materials.

"Sudan is one of the least developed countries in the world," states Goodyear. "It is a country prone to disaster, floods, civil war, and locust outbreaks."

Due primarily to the Sudan's penchant for disaster, CARE has initiated steps to thwart what appears to many to be an inevitable situation. CARE is also responding to the bleak times in the Sudan by designing development projects that can contribute to a reduction in the vulnerability of the rural population to ruin. According to Goodyear, "an improvement in the social, economic, and political conditions will aid in the regrowth of traditional coping mechanisms."

According to the New York Times (1/17/89), "the Sudan is experiencing a horrifying famine that recently claimed a quarter-million lives in southern regions of the country." Over the past five years, conflict between the government of the Sudan and the rebel forces of the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) has left the civilian population not only terrorized by the violence, but also without an adequate food supply.

Earl Goodyear and his staff will continue to fight the good fight to stem the tide of disaster in the African nation.

And a long way from home, Goodyear still gives credit to his Husson professors for their help in shaping his attitudes in directing him into the field of international development. "Play the game 'til the end, they taught me," says Goodyear.

No one on the Bangor campus today would expect anything less from the man who contributes in many ways to the economic well-being and the social future of the struggling Sudanese nation.

Julie Green welcomes Dick Gregory to Husson.

Alcohol Awareness Week at Husson

Students organized a protest march to kick off the activities for alcohol awareness week. The S.A.D.D. (Students Against Driving Drunk) membership organized and participated in the march. This group is relatively new to the Husson campus, but is affiliated with a long standing national S.A.D.D. group. Student officers include President Tom Hawksley and Vice President Viviana Altomari. Monthly meetings are open to all Husson students. Julie Green, Director of Student Affairs, serves as advisor to the group.

On Tuesday of Alcohol Awareness Week, the Husson community listened to the provocative and outspoken Dick Gregory. Dick Gregory has been credited with opening doors for black entertainers when he first gained fame as a comedian. Today, he combines the roles of human rights activist, social satirist, author, lecturer, recording artist, actor, philosopher and political activist to serve the cause of human liberation and alleviate human suffering.

Gregory proved to be a powerful speaker. "You can make a difference," Gregory stressed. He urges students to "get involved" and "understand your body and respect it by not using drugs or alcohol."

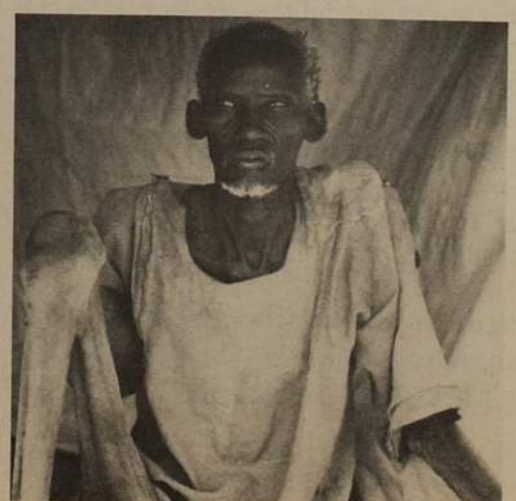

The New England School of Broadcasting taped his lecture and aired it on WHSN radio October 31, 1989.

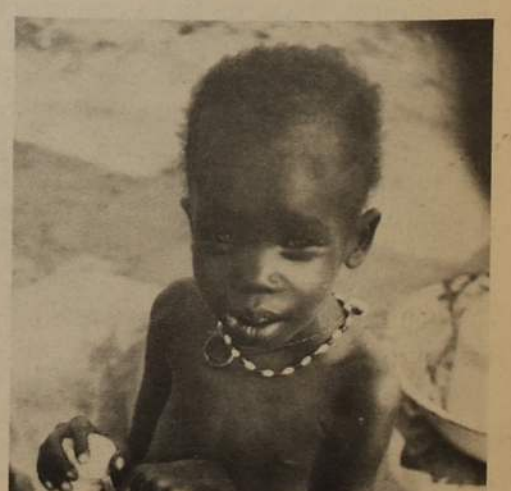

A film was shown on Wednesday and the week ended with the powerful and dynamic Artist of the Year, Jane Powell. The concert was described by students as "outstanding," "awesome," and extraordinary." The performance included the Jane Powell Band playing a mixture of jazz, ballads, show tunes, and some of the best rythm and blues this campus has ever heard.

The entire schedule of events was coordinated by Julie Green, Director of Student Affairs. It was a full week of top quality events for the entire Husson community.

Students Publish College Paper

Yes, the Spectator is once again being published weekly on the Husson campus. A small group of dedicated students have worked dilligently to rejuvenate this popular publication. The staff includes:

Editor in Chief	Vicki Lang
News & Features Editor	Kathy Chilvers
Campus Life & Sports	Stephen Novak
Layout Editor/Business Mgr.	Valerie Tefts
Reporter	Viviana Altomari
Advertising Mgr./Photographer	Linda Eaton
Advisors	Steve Berrien
	Karen Gordon

Many of these students devote time and energy on a volunteer basis each week. They may be taking photos, working on layout or soliciting advertisements. Whatever needs to be done, this group of individuals has been working as a team to produce a quality newspaper.

Over the years the Spectator has been published in a variety of formats from tabloid to duplicated pages. It is currently being printed at the Ellsworth American on newsprint in a four-column by 17" format. Photos of student activities and campus events appear in each issue. One photographer recently captured an unusual photo when a young moose slowly crossed the campus near the bell tower.

Special features have included international students, how to hunt for housing, the non-traditional student and more. The staff has been providing readers with a wide variety of information in an effort to keep them informed of Husson activities and events.

Readers are invited to make contributions to the paper and this invitation is now being extended to the alumni. An advertising campaign is just underway and rate cards are available by contacting the public affairs office on campus.

If you would like to subscribe to the Spectator, please contact the public affairs office at 947-1121, ext.244. The yearly rate is $30.00.

How to build your own team

Now you've done it. You volunteered for the really-big assignment — and you got it. Where do you go from here?

If you listen to internal communications experts Kaspers & Associates of Atlanta, they would tell you that the next step is to build your team.

Each team member should have a particular part of the work to do independently, and goals to reach. Remember too, that rot everyone wants to belong to a team, so look for people who want to work on the project.

While healthy confrontation is good, unworkable relationships may be avoided by selecting a variety of people to play different positions on your team. Here are some examples:

• Tacklers: People who like control, move quickly, may be blunt and sometimes offensive. If the tackler has skills you need, put him on the team anyway. He or she can be handled with careful communication.

• Enhancers: Democratic, easy to work with and optimistic. They make things run smoothly, but need acceptance and may take criticism personally.

• Allies: Accommodating, tolerate detail work but they hate confrontation. They may quit the team rather than voice objections.

• Monitors: They evaluate themselves and set their own goals. They insist on having all needed information before starting a job.

Tacklers, Enhancers, Allies, and Monitors. Put them all together, and they spell TEAM.

The basis of all teamwork, of course, is a situation where everyone is free to speak and tell all — without anything negative forthcoming from other members. Then you have a real team.

TYPOGRAPHICAL ERROR HAS UNEXPECTED RESULTS

In the last issue of the Ledger we intended to run the following two class notes:

Jennifer Young Huot '86 (Delta Sigma Delta) is a Mortgage Processing Manager at Casco Northern Bank in Portland. Jennifer and her husband, Kenneth '84, make their home in Biddeford.

Tracy A. Hawkes '86 (Delta Sigma Delta) was married on February 11, 1989, to James Bernier of Scarborough. James is employed by Merrell Air Engineers in South Portland. Tracy and James reside in Scarborough.

Somehow the two notes were merged at the printers and were missed by your editor while proofing the copy. The resulting paragraph had Jennifer married to James—all quite in the tradition of "As the World Turns."

Rest assured that Jennifer and Ken are happily married and living in Biddeford. Tracy and Jim are also happily married and living in Scarborough. Your editor is red-faced and hiding out somewhere until the dust settles.

Danny O'Connell '72 is an Ideal Leader for Brewer Football

reprinted by permission from the Bangor Daily News

by Ron Brown

The air was a little crisp this morning. You could feel the change of seasons wrapping itself around you like an electric blanket left out in the cold. It's almost fall, and, like many, I welcome the new season. For me, the end of summer means one thing: the beginning of football season. Motivated by the seasonal transition, I took a trip to Brewer's Doyle Field the other night, and was immediately swept by a flood of boyhood memories.

It was there that I would first taste the delicious rites of high school football in Maine: chilly, foggy nights, the sound of the highschool band, trumpets blaring, snare drums and their steady rat-tat-tatting in the breeze, the collective breath of hundreds of fans hovering over the throng, and the greatest treasure of all—the football being played before the excited crowd.

Holding on to my steaming cup of coffee that I would never drink I absorbed all of the sensations around me. The coffee was my 10-cent hand warmer, and when the chill of the night found its way into the cup, I'd get another to continue my nightly ritual.

Down on the field, the lights reflected off the football helmets. It was magic for a young boy to be surrounded by so many sights and sounds that to this day evoke memories of watching the Brewer Witches from the sidelines of that beloved old field.

And watching Brewer Coach Danny O'Connell on the news last week discussing the upcoming season made me realize again how fortunate area young people are to have such fine men directing their football fortunes.

For me, O'Connell epitomizes what a coach should be. When he stands at Doyle Field, surrounded by players and coaching staff, he is relishing every moment. O'Connell knows what these games are all about, and he has loved them from an early age.

Those who have the good fortune to be under his tutelage in football should know that in O'Connell they have not only a teacher who knows his subject thoroughly, but one who is sensitive to the necessary rigors of hard work needed to attain one's goals.

O'Connell is a survivor—a tenacious achiever—who overcame a severe health problem to return to the profession he loves. My own respect for him began many years ago when our paths crossed on the basketball court.

He was a stern disciplinarian even in his younger days as a coach. Rules were made to be followed, not broken. The path to success in O'Connell's world was narrow and required hard work and determination. The ultimate goal was reached by adhering to standards that perhaps others were not required to follow. The lessons learned were often not appreciated until later years.

Now, as head man at Brewer, Coach O'Connell embarks on a football season with a veteran team. His patience in teaching the game to younger players will surely pay off for him this season.

And on those Friday nights under the lights at Doyle Field, other young boys will be watching in earnest as coaches and players play out their roles in the world of high school football. They will long to wear those orange and black uniforms as I once did. They will smell the coffee. They will hear the band's music echoing off the houses up and down Wilson Street as they make their way to the game.

When the referee's whistle interrupts the night and the action begins, the young spectators will unknowingly become a part of the tradition that is Brewer High School football.

And I have a hunch that it won't be long before O'Connell joins the ranks of Brewer's football heroes like Kinney, Wing, Payne, Perrone, Hadley, Hatch, and others who have thrilled so many who have stood on the sidelines watching them play this great game.

International Statement of Purpose Endorsed by Husson Board

Students attending Husson College will soon be feeling the significance of the recently held Board of Trustees meeting. An International Education Task Force has been working since July to develop a statement of purpose that was endorsed by the full Board in October. "The purpose of international education at Husson College is to ensure that students are adequately prepared for effective, ethical performances in today's global society. . ."

While Husson's mission will continue to be to provide quality programs of study in business, health, education, and other professional fields, the Board's endorsement will provide opportunities for students to receive a more intense global perspective throughout the curriculum.

International education at Husson includes such things as intercultural experiences and activities, study abroad, international internships, international student exchanges, area studies, international cultural events, opportunities for faculty and staff development, research and teaching of international subject matter and foreign student advising.

In other action, Trustees approved a new employee handbook and authorized the hiring of a professional investment firm to manage the growing endowment, currently in excess of $1 million.
Trustees also announced plans for the pursuit of a major Department of Education Title III Strengthening Program Grant. Application for such will be submitted in the Spring of 1990.

New England School of Broadcasting Announces Availability of New Facility on Husson Campus

by Linda Eaton

The New England School of Broadcasting, located on the campus of Husson College is proud to announce the addition of a new television production studio and sound recording/audio engineering studio, according to President George Wildey. Both studios were operational and ready for use by the incoming class of September, 1989.

The sophisticated equipment adds new dimensions to the broadcasting school which already houses three radio studios to facilitate the WHSN radio station (89.3 on the FM dial). The radio station serves as a laboratory for the students as they become involved in news, promotion, copy-writing, traffic, production and basic engineering. WHSN is a Rock 'N Roll and contemporary music station playing to college age and adult audiences 365 days a year. They hours were recently extended to 9:00am to 12:00 midnight. Director of the New England School of Broadcasting, Ben Haskell, is also program director and station manager for WHSN.

Bud Nicoll with Instructor Mark Nadeau

The television production studio is completely soundproof and is used by the students to produce commercials, promotionals, etc., and can house a band during a recording session. Recording sessions are arranged so that the students are part of the actual production process. The isolation booth is also part of the new facility. Drummers or other instrumentation people use the booth during recording sessions to allow control of the music without overpowering the singer or other instruments. Someone in the booth, equipped with headphones, can hear what is going on in the production area. A sixteen-track audio mixer is used to further control the music as it is recorded, creating a mix one track at a time. Music is processed through a sixteen-track reel-to-reel tape. In addition to the audio mixer, an audio effects rack allows the control of the quality of the music.

The television production studio enables students to work on tapes for TV broadcasting or development of composure and proper diction to be used later during TV appearances or in radio announcing. After the tapes are produced on 3/4 inch tape they can be edited, taking out parts of the raw footage not needed as part of the finished product. The playback and recording editing equipment allows the insertion of music, other footage, and then the creation of a continuous smooth finished tape.

Students learn how to edit a taped interview.

Mark Wellman, owner of Wellmanart, Inc., an advertising and public relations firm in Bangor, is the instructor at the Sound Recording/Audio Engineering Studio. Also instructing students at the new facility is Mark Nadeau. Nadeau, a newcomer to the faculty, was a member of the first class to graduate from NESB in 1981 and is their first graduate to return to the classroom as an instructor. He is currently the Director of the WLBZ-TV evening news. Nadeau teaches Introduction to TV Production and the TV Lab course.

Other newcomers for the 1989-90 faculty include Anne Gabbianelli, Dale Duff and Bill Mockbee. Gabbianelli is the assignment editor for WLBZ-TV and is teaching two courses for the year on Radio-TV Reporting and Writing for Broadcasts. Duff is the Sports Director for WLBZ-TV and will be teaching the Sports Seminar for NESB. Mockbee, Broadcast Consultant and former Vice-President of WCVB-TV in Boston will be teaching the Broadcast Seminar.

As sixty full-time and five part-time NESB students began their year as the first class to take advantage of the truly unique facilities available to broadcasting students in Maine, this private institution is proud of their new one-plus-one degree program. After completing 32 credit hours satisfactorily, a student with at least a "C" average can attend Husson College classes and receive an associate degree in broadcast communications with an additional 30 credits. The courses offered in this program include marketing, management, accounting, computer operations, business law, composition and business communication.

Carolyn Roney—during an actual broadcast.

According to Administrator Donna Thorne, people who are interested in viewing the facilities at the school can arrange for tours through her office. The telephone number is (207) 947-6083. Staff members are present at the new Television Production Studio and Sound Recording/Audio Engineering Studio during scheduled hours only. Therefore, all visits must be coordinated through the NESB office. Visits are encouraged by the NESB staff. The WHSN studio is also available to those interested in visiting the facility. These studios provide broadcasting students an outstanding opportunity for learning and the school is certainly an educational facility of which the State of Maine can be proud.

INTERNSHIPS NEEDED FOR INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS

Husson College is host to a growing population of students from other countries. In our increasing promotion of international education, Husson students are encouraged to study global concerns and be open to international opportunities, including foreign language study and study abroad possibilities.

A unique opportunity exists right now for some businesses, especially in the Bangor area, to host some of our international business students as interns. Any LEDGER readers interested in providing internship positions or visitation invitations to this group may call Paul Husson, Sandi Collier or Bud Vassey at Husson to have your questions answered.

Ben Haskell discusses format of radio broadcast with Mickey Smith and Crystal West

This is For You, Mom!

Marvin Cox graduated from Husson College in May, 1989, but he was an entering freshman at Husson in September of 1965. Yes, its a long time, but Marvin traveled around the world in those 24 years.

In 1965, students used the YMCA as the Husson dorm and meals were served at a local hotel on Exchange Street in downtown Bangor. Marvin stayed for one semester and then joined the military. During his 20 years with the armed forces he earned an associate degree through the Community College of the Air Force. He lived in such places as the Philippines, Washington D.C., Italy and Loring Air Force Base in northern Maine. He was stationed at Loring on two different occassions for a total of nine years.

With Husson courses offered on the base at that time, Marvin took a course or two each semester, moving closer each time to his lifelong goal of earning a bachelor degree in business administration.

After serving the military for 20 years, Marvin decided to stay in the area, try for a civil service job at Loring and finish those last few courses at Husson.

Marvin Cox is a remarkable man. His caring attitude, diverse abilities, strong perserverence and determination are apparent as he talks about the changes in his life. The site coordinator for Husson in Caribou, Theresa Wunderlich, says, "Marvin was always a joy to have as a student here. We still miss him. He set a good example for those students just starting in the program."

Marvin completed his courses and graduated in May. He also secured a government civil service job at Loring AFB as Financial Operations Supervisor for Loring's recreational facilities. "My degree from Husson provided me the opportunity to bid on a job for which I wouldn't have otherwise been considered," says Marvin. "I've moved up the ladder progressively, but the degree made all the difference this time."

Marvin enjoys his job. "It's an interesting job that allows me to use the skills I learned as a Husson student as well as the skills obtained in my military service. My degree opened the door for advancement in an area I find enjoyable and rewarding," says Marvin.

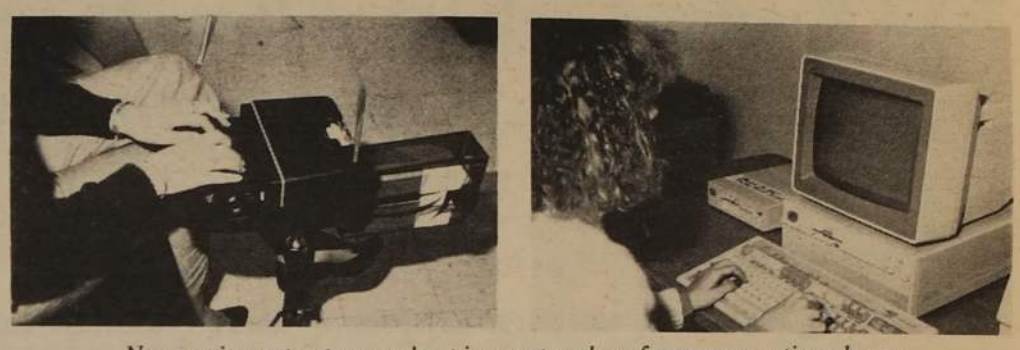

Loring AFB is designated as a "rural" base by the government. Therefore, additional funds are appropriated for recreational purposes. Marvin oversees a $7 million program with 16 different recreational activities such as a rec hall, golf course, bowling lanes, library, child care facility and more. While some areas are self-supporting by the revenue they generate, others are supported by nontaxpayer and/or taxpayer monies. Marvin supervises the Dow Pines facility located on Great Pond and a child care annex in Presque Isle in addition to the Loring operation.

He spends a great deal of time working on financial reports. However, with the assistance of a mainframe computer system, a "great secretary" and "a super staff" he is able to enjoy this challenging new position.

On October 27, 1989, Marvin flew to Mississippi for two months additional training in his career field. He will share his newly acquired knowledge and skills with his staff when he returns.

Marvin seemed a bit reluctant to grant an interview when contacted in October. As the interview progressed, the reason for his reluctance became apparent. He is not a man that enjoys "tooting his own horn." When questioned about this, he had to admit he agreed to be interviewed because he knew his Mom would love it. So, this is for you, Mom!

New equipment gets a workout in court and conference reporting classes.

Husson Meets the Challenge

Court and conference reporters at Husson now have a leading edge. Husson has purchased a "State-of-the-Art" computer-aided transcription (CAT) system for the court reporting curriculum. Husson continues to recognize the impact of technology on careers of the future. This acquisition will enable Husson court and conference reporters to train on the latest technological advance in this area.

The beginning theory class has been upgraded to become completely compatible with the computer system. Students are now able to see how incorporating correct computer compatible theory will save editing and production time.

The prospective employer will now be able to have even higher expectations of the Husson graduate. He/she will get a much faster return on their investment by cutting down on training time.

As reporters learn machine shorthand, they must develop the ability to write "verbatim" the spoken word in as short a time as possible. It doesn't end there, however. Court and conference reporters must then produce, in transcript form, that spoken word in the shortest time possible.

The combination of manual skill combined with computer-aided transcription will accomplish that goal. Husson is proud to be able to make this new acquisition that allows a more complete training for our students.

Someone is Missing

One Husson professor that has walked the halls of Husson for many years hasn't been seen for some time. Dr. Phillip Grant has been on sabbatical this semester to research for a new book "Effective Supervisory Practice." The book deals with supervisory techniques and specific ways to develop supervisory practices. Dr. Grant says, "The role of the supervisor has been lost in the last 15-20 years. We need to redefine and better understand the true role of the supervisor. The job has been loaded down with nonsupervisory tasks such as safety, regulations and clerical tasks when the supervisor should be planning, directing and controlling the work of others and focusing on the nature of the supervisor's functions."

An intense research project was initiated by Dr. Grant this fall. It involved over 200 suprvisors throughout the state of Maine. The information gathered includes 20 real-life cases to be included in the book. Grant expects the book to be "Short on theory and long on practical quick turnaround uses." Teachers will be able to use "Effective Supervisory Practices" as a textbook for Introductory and Supervisory Management courses. It will also serve as a guide for training sessions. One special feature of the book is a section on self-management. "This entails positioning, attitude, value systems and ethics of the job," says Grant.

Other sections include dealing with personal health management—stress, physical and emotional health, upgrading known techniques for career development paths, and necessary techniques to execute the supervisory responsibilities. He expects the project to take 18-24 months to complete.

Dr. Grant is well known in the area for his research in the work place. Before starting his new book he first had to complete a morale study he was conducting for a local company. This particular study involved the evaluation of retail businesses, from the customers' perspective, in relation to customer services.

"My wife has been very supportive of this and other ventures. She has been instrumental in the success of my work by proofreading my material, " says Grant. His students will be happy to know that he hasn't been gardening, skiing, or even keeping the house clean. He's had some pretty heavy homework of his own to keep him busy.

Homecoming '89

by Viviana Altomari '93
reprinted with permission from Viviana, Spectator Staff

Last Friday and Saturday something very special happened. Members of the Husson Family gathered together to celebtate their homecoming. The festivities began on Friday. The first event to kick off homecoming was the play "Murder at Howard Johnson's."

Registration was a special thing to behold. People were laughing and talking about the good old days. There was a feeling of camaraderie shared by all. Whatever class they were a part of, they were all a part of the same family.

This play was a chance for them to get together and have a good time. Saturday saw the first annual alumni tennis tournament. This was an event that was not to be missed. There was a full turnout and both courts were being used for a full two hours. There were no professionals playing, but they were all fantastic in their own right. Balls flew all over the tennis court. In fact, some of the volleys were so spectacular they cleared the court altogether. All the players remained cool throughout the game, except for the times the ball did not do what they wanted it to do. All in all, every one did quite well. Many ribbons and trophies were passed out, but everyone who was there was a winner.

Another very special, very moving event of homecoming was the induction of new members into the Sports Hall of Fame. This year seven new members were inducted. David Paine, a member of the class of 1968, was inducted for his excellence in Golf. He was also recognized for his work in the community.

The second inductee was Sally (Hathorne) Cahill. Mrs. Cahill, a member of the class of 1952, was inducted postumously. Her award was accepted by her husband and daughter. Both were very moved by the award as was the audience by Mrs. Cahill's daugher's speech.

Robert Duprey, a member of the class of 1966, holds the record for the greatest percentage of foul shots: 93% in the '64/'65 season.

Next was Keith Drisko, a member of the class of 1932, who was also recently inducted into the Maine Sports Hall of Fame. Mr. Drisko was a professional baseball player from 1933 to 1941.

Serge Henry was the fourth inductee into the Hall of Fame. Henry, a member of the class of 1965, is well known to the members of the Husson community for his soccer ability. He scored 10 goals in 1963 and 24 goals in 1964. He was unable to attend the affair because he lives on the island of Mauritius in the Indian Ocean. His brother-in-law, Milton Wright, received the award for him.

The next inductees were Jean and Carrie Murphy. Carrie was a member of both the classes of 1958 and 1977. Her twin sister, Jean, was a member of the class of 1958. Both women were inducted into the Hall of Fame for their excellence in basketball. Jean and Carrie both dedicated their awards to their parents, who couldn't be present. Their speeches were videotaped.

The final inductee was Donald Vachon, a member of the class of 1962. Don was inducted for his excellence in baseball.He states that his dedication to the future has helped him attain all of his goals.

One of the final ceremonies of homecoming was the Alumni Awards banquet. This was a time when those Husson Alumni who had excellence or had given a little more of themselves were recognized. The list of recipients was long. The winner for Excellence in Accounting was Linwood E. Bell, a member of the class of 1964, who is well known in his community for his work with various charities. Bell was greatly humbled by the award as he recalled the only reason he got into Husson was because his mother's name was Dorothy, the same as Chief Husson's wife. Linwood is a managing partner of Coopers and Lybrand in Portland.

The award for Excellence in Business Administration was given to Edward Darling, a member of the class of 1964. Darling is President and CEO for Downeast Toyota and Buick in Brewer.

The Excellence in Education Award was received by James Doughty, a member of the class of 1961. Doughty is the superintendant of schools in Bangor.

The next award on the bill was the Excellence in Office Administration and Secretarial Studies. The recipient of this award was Erin Leighton. Ms. Leighton, who was unable to attend, is a with the freelance court reporting firm she cofounded, Boyce & Leighton.

Honored guests receive their awards.

She is also the recording secretary for the National Court Reporters Association.

The Excellence in Nursing Award was received by Deborah Johnson of the class of 1987. Deborah is now the Administrator for specialty care at the Eastern Maine Medical Center in Bangor.

The Public Service Award was given to Edward Youngblood, a member of the class of 1961. Youngblood was out of town on business and the award was accepted by his son Michael. Michael told those present that they had something to be thankful for in that his father was not there to accept the award himslef. He stated, "My father has a gift for making long-winded speeches. He told me he would write me a speech for this evening. I told him that I had the right to veto that speech. The short speech he wrote was about six pages long. Needless to say, I vetoed."

This year's Service Award was received by Donna Townsend, a member of the class of 1986. This award was given to an employee of Husson College who has gone that extra mile to help students.

The final award was the Outstanding Alumnus award. This award was given to Col. William Hessert, a member of the classof 1969. Col. Hessert is Vice Wing Commander of the 101st Air Refueling Wing of the Maine Air National Guard in Bangor.

The evening and Homecoming ended with a dance featuring the band Coloured Rain. Everyone had a marvelous time and left wondering what was in the works for homecoming next year.

Everyone enjoyed the company.

New members of the Hall of Fame.
