Women Across Campus

by Linda L. Labin

This year a new group of women, consisting of faculty, staff, and administrators, has been formed to address issues of vital concern to the women of Husson.

Members are: Julie Green, Chair; Amy Averre; Melanie Klein-Robbenhaar; Linda Jenkins; Lois Tower; Marge Zoldi; and Linda Labin. In the near future the group hopes to add representative members from the student body.

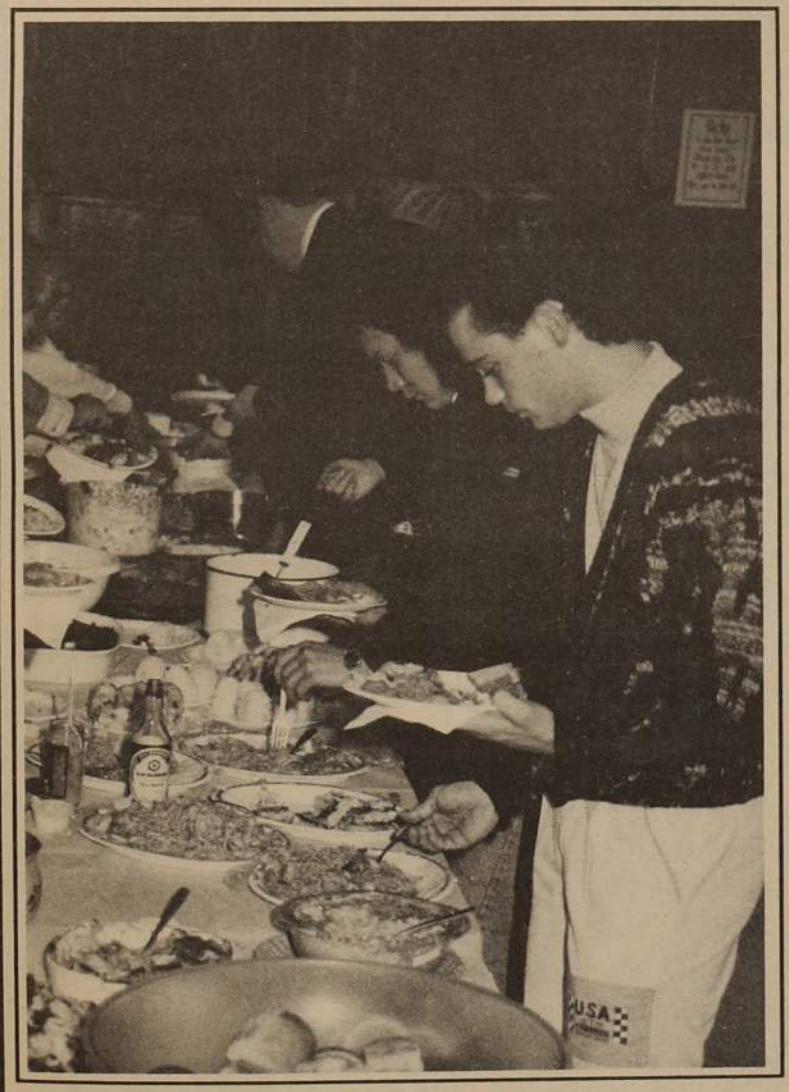

Some issues the group intends to address are the following: Sexism on Campus, Women's History Month (March), Nontraditional Women's Issues, Day Care, Date Rape, Women's Health Issues, and Minority Programming.

To establish better communication with students and create a student women's club, the WAC group has planned an open forum for our next meeting, Tuesday, November 13, 1990, at 2:30 p.m. in Room 303.

All interested students, faculty, and staff are cordially invited to attend.

International Pot-Luck Supper

The International Club of Husson College recently held a Pot-Luck Supper which was attended by approximately 100 people. All the guests prepared dishes from countries all around the world.

Dan Hutchins Addresses Accounting Society

by Lynn Perreault
Accounting Society Secretary

Husson graduate, Dan Hutchins, of Coopers and Lybrand, one of the "Big Six" accounting firms, spoke to the accounting society on October 10. His presentation was about his experiences in the field of public accounting. He is now an audit manager at Coopers and Lybrand. At the staff level, Mr. Hutchins said, he found the work very challenging. Auditing was hands-on right from the beginning. He said it was not the type of job where you watch someone for six months before you actually do any work. He also spoke about the promotion process at Coopers and Lybrand. He said the higher you get on the corporate ladder, the more you are encouraged to get involved in the local community. He enjoys getting involved in the community. When asked about the difference between national and local firms, he stated that it was merely a matter of personal preference. He also talked about the difference between tax and audit. He prefers audit, personally, but said that tax can also be very rewarding. Tax people, he said, are generally accepted better by the client because they are viewed as people who will save the client money.

Dan Hutchins' speech was both enjoyable and very informative. This event was sponsored by the Accounting Society, a group of accounting majors who try to get the most out of their education while at the same time being involved in activities that help you see accounting in the real world. It is a very active organization on campus and all accounting majors are encouraged to get involved. We have also sponsored a tour of Champion Paper International and we have held a pizza party in the Arrowhead.

We will be having a panel discussion for all students interested in internships, we will be going to visit an accounting firm in Boston in November, and we will also sponsor an office visit to two local accounting firms. These are just some of the activities coming up on our schedule for the year. If you are interested in participating, keep an eye out for posters indicating the time and place of our next meeting. We hope to see you there!

The following is part of a letter I received from the President of the United States on the issue of voting. I thought it might be of interest to the students at Husson who are a part of the voting majority.

"Once every two years you do the hiring and firing in America.

Once every two years you have the right to make a major course correction for America — the right to change America's laws by changing America's lawmakers.

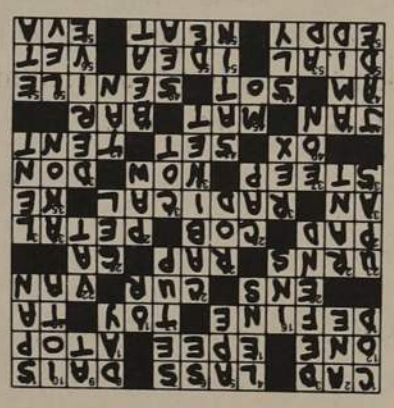

I don't have to tell you that we face serious economic, educational, and environmental challenges. Also the equally serious challenges posed by drugs and criminal violence demand decisive action.

When selfish interest stops politicians from taking decisive action, you must settle the matter by electing enough like-minded candidates to get the job done....

In the next few days, think about the children around you. Remember that they can't vote this November 6th, even though they will have to live with the consequences.

To ignore your right, your obligation, to vote is to surrender control of your future and theirs as well.

Vote your honest conviction. Make your best contribution. Take advantage of America's greatest freedom..."

In the last few weeks there have been a couple of great changes made in Peabody Hall and I for one would like to comment on them. In case you didn't know, the new computer room is open and there are Tandy 1000's and IBM PS/2's available for student use. Although I have never used PS/2's before, I am getting some crash courses on some of its functions. I would have to say that getting used to the mouse takes some time. Also in the rooms the students will find high-back soft seats that are easily wheeled about. This helps to prevent that irritating grinding sound on the floor when you push back in your seat.

On the third floor in room 303, you may have noticed a very sophisticated conference room with new carpeting on the floor. The seats are heavy but with padded seats and backs. I have class in the morning in that room and I would have to say that it feels much more adult-like to hold lectures and give presentations in that classroom. Other classrooms with the tiled floors, ancient desks and chairs just do not have the style of room 303. I have heard it rumored that Husson plans to remodel one classroom a year to that style. I sure hope that more rooms are done sooner than that.

Most people just complain about Husson's insufficient equipment, but slowly there is being a change here in Peabody and it is appreciated. Now if we could just see some improvements in the dorms.

Think about this ... It's 11:00 on a Saturday morning, you and a few friends walk over to Dickerman Dining Commons (DDC) and you see a line of over 40 people with only one DDC employee trying to serve the needs of all the students. The line wouldn't shock me so much on a weekday, because I know there is more than one worker serving food behind the counter. Even though the service is regularly slow, it is not half as bad as the service on weekends.

If you plan on eating something hot from the DDC on the weekends (and we all know there aren't that many other choices, but that's another issue) you can expect to wait between 15 - 30 minutes. Last Sunday evening, the DDC had one worker taking all the orders. How can one employee be expected to take orders, cook, serve the food, and keep all the supplies full, while 50 hungry people moan and gripe in line?

I came to Husson because of the business program. Husson's slogan "TOMORROW'S LEADERS ARE AT HUSSON TODAY" no longer means anything to me. Husson College's management of the DDC doesn't even follow the basic management techniques taught to me in my Business Organization & Management course. In this course, I learned that one of the most effective and most productive techniques is the assembly line, where each person specializes in one thing.

Because I am a open-minded person, I would like to make a suggestion to make the service at the DDC more effective. Hiring and training of employees is needed. If there aren't enough students with work study positions, then Husson College will have to advertise and interview workers from around Bangor. There is no excuse for not having at least three people serving food, especially when there is only one line open during weekend meals. If there was a person preparing the food, another taking orders and cooking on the grill, and another filling supplies, then the DDC would have quicker and more efficient services. It would also be a more pleasant place to eat on the weekends.

In closing, I would like to say that if Husson is trying to lead by example through the Husson DDC food program, then the slogan for Husson will have to change to this ... "TODAY'S POOR LEADERSHIP IS BECAUSE OF HUSSON YESTERDAY."

Thank you for listening, I just hope you heard!

How many times have you gone into the computer lab to put together a report or just do some homework? After packing up all the things that you need to take along with you to get the job done and walking out into the cold, you finally come to the computer lab. What do you find? You cannot use the computers because a class is being held. So instead you go to the other computer room only to find that one is in use also!

Why is it that the instructors won't let you into the class to finish your homework? Is it because they expect that you will break into song and dance and disturb the entire class? Come on, the other students would like to get their work done also.

Isn't it possible to schedule classes so that at least one of the rooms is available to the students? I really don't think that is all that big a task to accomplish. Better yet, just allow the students in to finish their homework. We pay just as much as anyone else does in this school, so the computer room should be available to us when we need it.

KISS CONCERT
by Jamie Glover

Last week the greatest rock and roll band performed before an almost sold-out concert in Cumberland County Civic Center. For me this was a dream that finally came true.

A feeling of intense anticipation fell over the crowd as the lights dimmed and the curtains began to rise on the stage. Before us stood a Sphinx's head that must have been close to 50 feet tall. Slowly the mouth of the Sphinx dropped open, lasers of bright green shot out over the crowd, and out came the band. The opening song for Kiss was "I Stole Your Love," a song taking us back a few years into the mid-70's when Kiss began establishing themselves as the foundation of rock and roll.

Lead singer Paul Stanley had been in a car accident the night before and had a broken rib to deal with, but the show went on. Paul danced around the stage with all the energy that the audience would expect from any Kiss concert. Throughout the show, lights illuminated the stage and fire exploded to add to all the energy produced by the band's incredible stage antics. Gene Simmons was as vulgar as you would expect him to be throughtout the concert. His energy, along with that of all the other band members never waned. Drummer Eric Carr did the most incredible drum solo that I have ever heard. The audience was on their feet in awe as Eric pounded out his solo.

Finally the Sphinx began to disappear into the stage and from the stage the band's title began to rise in bright white flashing lights. An incredible series of explosions and fire followed by a shower in flames that cascaded onto the stage brought the show to an end.

Some people could be offended by the band because of the vulgarity and the bluntness with which they speak about other forms of music. In one instance the band had the audience shouting "No more New Kids" and they also put down rap music (both of which I couldn't agree with more). For me the entire concert was what rock and roll was all about and I would do it again, even though my ears were ringing for two days afterwards. For those who went to the concert, I'm sure you weren't disappointed; and for those who didn't make it, be sure to catch them the next time they are in town. Many groups try to copy Kiss's style but Kiss is a one and only band and continues to rank #1 in my book.

Important Deadlines for Maine Recruiting Consortium

Seniors who have signed up for employment interviews at the December 6, Maine Recruiting Consortium are reminded to check their schedules in the Career Development Office between November 19 and November 30.

Checking in is important for two reasons. First, students will discover if they have been selected as an interviewee or as an alternate. Second, they will find out the time of their scheduled interviews. If you still want the interview you must initial beside your name to show your commitment to be there. If you do not initial next to your name, the interview will be assigned to an alternate.

Students who registered for the Consortium may also sign up on waiting lists on the day of the event. Those who are willing to commit their time for the entire day often reap the benefit of an interview from a "no-show".

Students interested in applying for interviews at the February 28 Consortium event, to be held at the Holiday Inn by the Bay in Portland, should inquire in the Career Development Office for details the beginning of December. The last day to sign up will be January 21.

A Look at the Movies...

by Jamie Glover

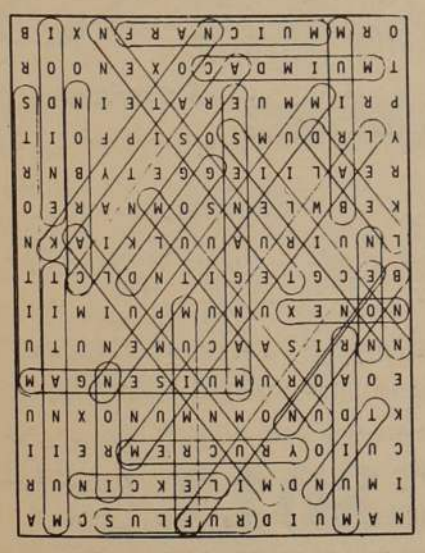

TEENAGE MUTANT NINJA TURTLES

Cowabunga Dudes! I just got done seeing the Turtles for the first time. In case you didn't know, they are finally out on video. Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles was a box-office smash last year, so much so that the sequel is coming out early next year.

To be honest, I really didn't want to see this movie because I had seen the cartoon enough and I really wasn't much of a fan of these guys. But after many people told me that the movie was very entertaining, I decided to give it a try. Suprisingly, I loved it. I found the humor to be very adult and the action sequences done to an expert quality.

For those few people who don't know, the turtles become human-like when they are found wandering in a pool of toxic waste. Soon they become extremely smart and are taught the way of the Ninja by their rat friend Splinter. Now, Splinter is a rat but he is very wise and treats each turtle like a son. In this movie Splinter is kidnapped by the evil Shredder and the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles must come to the rescue. Unfortunately, I cannot seem to keep each turtle's name straight but ask any young kid and they can name each of them with no problem.

I feel this was a movie with an excellent concept that was aided by incredible special effects by the late Jim Henson. Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles was charming, witty, and action packed. I was happily surprised and I can say that I am eagerly awaiting the sequel, along with at least half of America. I give the turtles ✱✱✱✱ stars.

GRAVEYARD SHIFT

Stephen King's newest adaptation from a short story to the big screen is now playing. Graveyard Shift is the screenplay based upon a short story from his book Night Shift. The last movie made from this book was a monster bomb called Maximum Overdrive.

Graveyard Shift is centered around an old cotton mill somewhere in Maine. (That somewhere was shot partly in Brewer). In this old mill, rats dwell everywhere, watching each worker who has to work below in the cellar during the 11 to 7 shift in the evening. Many workers do not live very long working this shift because these rats are not your normal run-of-the mill rats (no pun intended). These rats are extremely intelligent and dangerous and they have a mother rat that is about 30 feet long and has bat wings.

Over the Fourth of July vacation certain workers get trapped in the mill and eventually fall miles below into the cavern in which the monster rat lives. One by one the workers are quickly becoming the hunted as the monster hunts them down through the dark and eerie tunnels below the Earth. The workers find out much too late that much of the infestation of the vermin comes from the old cemetary beside the mill. The same cemetary that is quickly being washed away by a creek that is becoming a swamp.

Graveyard Shift was pretty slow for the first 45 minutes, so the audience isn't too sure where the movie is heading. But towards the end, the suspense really begins to pick up. My only problems with the movie were, first, that much of the monster rat is left to the imagination. The other problem is the exaggeration of the Maine accent that a few characters use at certain times and then at other times seem to forget. I don't know anyone who talks the way the people in this movie did.

If you read the short story, don't expect it to be much like that, because there are very few similarities between the story and the movie. So if you like Stephen King movies and are scared of rats, catch Graveyard Shift before it leaves the theatres. I'm giving it ✱✱✱ stars.

Got Those Mailbox Blues? Here's a Surefire Cure!!

by Marilyn Parkin

Ever wonder how to get some more mail? I'm not talking about those wonderful pieces of junk mail that show up with boring regularity. I mean real letters from real people addressed to you personally, here at your Husson mailbox.

The answer is to write to any serviceperson stationed with Operation Desert Shield. My family has, and the mailbox has filled right up. We're learning about life in the desert.

Christmas is coming. It's a time of giving and sharing, so share some of your time and send a letter or two to someone who will truly appreciate it. Life in the desert, when you're on duty, is a wee bit dull. The folks there are thirsty for more than beer; they want news and contact with the people and events back home. Scorpion races can take up only so much of their off-time. Be a friend and write. They write back. Help make their mail-call a happy one. It will make both of you feel better and put a letter in that mailbox for each of you. Get out your pen and paper and wish someone Happy Thanksgiving. You might even develop a lifelong friendship with someone. You have everything to gain, and nothing to lose.

Epsilon Tau Epsilon is the second oldest Greek organization on campus. We are involved in many activities such as the annual Halloween party, annual Toga party, raffles, Greek games, and intramural sports. However, due to pledging, we were unable to hold our Halloween party this year.

We are also very active in Community Service projects such as raising money for the Bangor Shelter, visiting the elderly, cleaning the Ronald McDonald House, and helping out around campus.

Right now we are in the process of refurnishing our lounge. We are selling candy bars to help raise money, so if you get a craving for something sweet, just find one of the sisters.

A few of the community service projects we have done so far this year are cleaning the Ronald McDonald House, serving a luncheon for the AARP'S (American Association of Retired People), ushering the jazz concert over Husson's Homecoming weekend, and donating money to Easterseals and the Husson Women's Basketball Team. We will be having a canned food drive for the Hampden Congregational Church prior to Thanksgiving.

Please feel free to come up on the floor and visit anytime.

Nocturnal Killer Cats Stalk Parking Lot

Something has got to be done to reduce or eliminate the stray cat population in the dormitory parking lots. As of last week , I have identified eight different cats. Two of the cats are "coon cats," one of which is the size of a small deer, and is covered with burdocks and hairballs. There are also four, three-month-old white, tan, and gray kittens. The veterans of the "secretive cat clan" are two money-colored cats which have resided behind the dormitories for at least three years.

According to residents who have lived in the dorms for several years, there have always been stray house cats salvaging around the dumpsters, but over the summer there seems to have been a population boom.

These pesky little cats can be found late at night, pawing through the dumpsters or sitting on your front tire under your wheel well.

Students shouldn't try to chase these critters in an attempt to catch them. This summer, dormitory maintanence director, Robert Gamble, was attacked by a kitten no bigger than a softball. The wound required a trip to the hospital and a month-longh series of rabies shots. (No joke! I'm serious!)

So a word of caution to students who use the resident parking lot: Be careful when maneuvering your vehicle in the parking lot and don't touch the darn things; they can be vicious!

Room 303 in Peabody Hall has been equipped with carpeting, conference tables and padded chairs. My Advertising class meets in this room and students find it to be a very positive feature. It simulates a "real-life" business environment.

I believe all senior-level classes should meet in a classroom (or "conference room") of this style. It promotes class participation and allows us to become confortable in a business-related arrangement. I understand the plan is to redue one classroom a year. I believe this process should be upgraded to redesigning five or six classrooms over the next summer vacation.
