Two Tales of Two Brothers; The Daigles and The Gardners

By Dean Lunt

The Daigles

Although he never discussed it, John Daigle seemed to have a philosophy about raising his sons in the family business: show no favoritism in work assignments, expose them to all aspects of the operation and have them gain professional experience elsewhere.

"I think he had a plan," said Greg Daigle. "He wanted us to be well-rounded and well-prepared in all areas of the business. And he wanted to make sure if we ever did come back into the business, we would really appreciate what we had."

It seems to have to worked.

Two of his three sons, Greg, 44, and Gary, 47, returned to Fort Kent in 1984 armed with Husson College degrees and significant outside experience to rev up sales at the family's heavy truck dealership. And rev them up they have.

Since Greg '80 ΜΣΧ and Gary '77 returned, Daigle & Houghton has boosted new trucks sales more than five-fold, nearly quadrupled employment to more than 50, expanded the Fort Kent headquarters and service center, picked-up the Western Star truck line to complement their International Trucks line, added complementary product lines such as Valley Trailers, and, most dramatically, opened a 25,000-square-foot sales and service center in the highly competitive Bangor area.

With the Bangor office helping pry open a new market, the 52-year-old company now stands as an even larger industrial force in Eastern and Northern Maine. And future prospects look bright.

"I think we have an opportunity to keep growing and building in this market," said Gary Daigle. "There is definitely still room to grow."

Daigle & Houghton has been a well-known name in Northern Maine for more than five decades. The company was started in 1951 by two local potato farmers, Leo Daigle and Tom Houghton Sr. to sell Massey-Harris farm equipment. Leo Daigle's son, John, grew up on the family's 150-acre potato farm in the Soldier Pond area. However, in the 1950s John left home after college to serve a stint in the U.S. Air Force. He returned to Fort Kent in 1956 to work as a mechanic and help manage the business, which by this time also sold International trucks. By 1959, Daigle & Houghton left the farm equipment business to concentrate on truck sales.

In 1964, the Daigle's bought out the Houghtons, but decided to maintain the company name, in part to help differentiate it from the other area businesses that featured the name Daigle – a popular surname in Northern Maine.

The company, which at the time competed against roughly a dozen other International dealerships from Bangor northward, became increasingly successful in the region; sales continued to grow as did market share into the 1980s.

The company that Gary and Greg (a third brother, Douglas, decided not to enter the business) returned to in 1984 had overcome a difficult stretch to survive as the last International dealership in the area. Daigle & Hougton now had 14 employees and sold a few dozen trucks a year in addition to extensive parts and service.

Gary and Greg were confident it could do even more.

Greg Daigle, like his brothers, literally grew up in the business located on Market Street and certainly wasn't fond of all the jobs he had to do. The boys, as part of their father's philosophy, took on much of the "grunt work" whether it be sanding in the body shop or shoveling snow off the roof.

"He wanted to make sure there was no special treatment or special favors for us," Greg said. "If there was a lousy job to do, he gave it to us."

Greg attended Fort Kent High School where he played soccer and tennis. Throughout high school and college, Greg worked for his father who moved them through most areas of the business to make sure they knew all the details, although the future was never really discussed.

After graduation, Greg headed to Husson College (All eight of John and Mary Ellen Daigle's children attended college). Greg knew about Husson from Gary and respected how the college operated and knew it could provide him with the solid business background he wanted.

He earned a bachelor's degree in business administration, served as a Presidential Guide leading tours of the college during his time there and graduated Cum Laude. He also began dating his future wife, Louise, a Fort Kent native and fellow Husson student.

"Husson provided the type of education I wanted," he said. "There were small classes so I was not a number and there were people and instructors there with whom you could develop a real relationship with and learn."

Greg's first job was as an assistant manager at Kmart in Bangor. The Kmart management trainee path took him from Bangor to Falmouth, Maine to Saugus, Massachusetts in just 18 months. The frequent moves caused lots of anxiety and, worst of all, Kmart planned to take him not only out of Maine, but also out of New England — that just couldn't happen.

"We decided it was more important to be happy than to have that job," he said. "And we definitely did not want to leave New England. We are very close to the family and very family-oriented and we didn't want to be far away."

He returned to Maine to work for an office supply company and Louise took a good job in the Portland area. They built a house and settled in a few miles from the mall and a few miles from the beach. Then his father called with a surprise offer.

"My dad called up and said he had bought my grandfather out and if we wanted to come back and help run the family business we were welcome," Greg said. "There was no family pressure, but the business was growing and there was an opportunity if we wanted it."

Patriarch John Daigle

"I think he had a plan," said Greg Daigle. "He wanted us to be well-rounded and well-prepared in all areas of the business. And he wanted to make sure if we ever did come back into the business, we would really appreciate what we had."

Gary Daigle

Trucking magnate H.O. Bouchard visits with Greg Daigle at an Open House.

He did. He wanted to work for himself, he loved Fort Kent, loved fishing for trout in the Allagash and still hunted deer and partridge from the family's camp on the Canadian border. It would be the best place to raise their family (they now have two children).

Back at Daigle & Houghton, he started in parts and service. Home again.

Gary Daigle starting working in the family business when he was about eight years old. Like Greg, he didn't always like it.

"When you are an owner's son, you get the jobs no one else wants to do; shoveling roofs, cleaning the driveways and those things," he said. "When everyone else was out playing, we were up shoveling the roof."

After graduating from Fort Kent, Gary briefly considered the U.S. Air Force, but instead attended the University of Maine at Presque Isle. However, after one year he decided he didn't want to be a teacher and headed to Husson for a business degree.

"Husson had a good reputation for business and they had a reputation for great job placement," he said. "It seemed to me they had a good career development plan. Also, coming from a small area and another small campus, Husson seemed like a good fit."

His first job was selling used trucks from a trailer outside Boston.

He made very little money to start, but honed his sales skills, became increasingly aggressive and quickly rose in the organization. He soon worked at a new sales office in Connecticut and broke new ground in developing business relations to boost sales. In 1981, he accepted a job offer from one of his customers to help run a moving and storage business. The position had the potential to include a minority ownership position.

In 1984, came the surprise call came from his father offering an opportunity to return home. The decision boiled down to ownership and family.

"It was a little more difficult decision for me than Greg, I had another opportunity and was making more money than I would by coming home. My wife also had a career."

When all the issues were weighed, he and his wife, Barbara, were soon on their way back to Fort Kent, where they would raise their three children in their hometown.

Back at Daigle & Houghton, the focus immediately turned to one issue: "figuring out how to grow the business," Greg said.

On the plus side, they had benefited from their outside jobs.

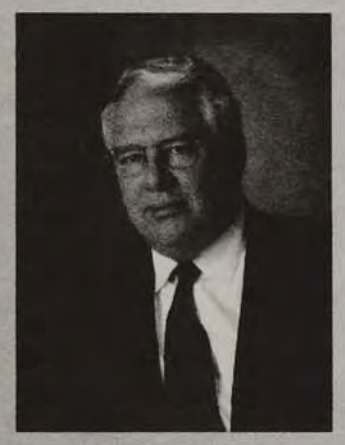

"After you are away you can appreciate the benefits of what you have and of running your own business," Greg said. He also acquired skills that they would have been

Dear Alumni and Friends,

Husson summers follow a different beat then the academic seasons of the year. There are no ebbs and flows of students rushing to class; rather, there is a decidedly international rhythm, a casualness in attire, periodic invasions of youth camps, and the smell of 50 acres of cut grass. With a campus already full, planning for another surge of enrollment this fall, the bucolic, halcyon days of summer flow like the underlying energy that is building to accommodate our enrollment growth and search for excellence. A recent Maine Sunday Telegram story captures it all. A young Somali immigrant is coming to Husson this fall to play football and study nursing. This is an example of what makes Husson really fun these days.

Anticipation of more students this fall provides us with an opportunity to bring on board new full-time faculty in finance, sports management, legal studies, physical and occupational therapy, nursing and education. Following the mandate of its accrediting board the physical therapy faculty is moving towards a six-year program and Husson's first professional doctoral degree. Both deans of Business and Education are preparing for professional accreditation visits this fall in their respective fields while both the School of Science and Humanities and The New England School of Communications are considering degrees in writing and journalism through different prisms of the same glass. The faculty have joined the Husson Alumni Association in proposing that we consider a name change to Husson University, while retaining a century-old tradition of being student centered and collegiate.

With record undergraduate enrollments of an estimated 1,400 full-time students this fall, 800 in residence and a growing number in programs that lead to graduate degrees, and an increasingly scholarly faculty, your institution is simply no longer "small." We are like the kid who has just had a growth spurt and has discovered books and now is trying to sort out what it's all about. We'll keep you posted.

Sincerely,

William H. Beardsley

more difficult to develop at Daigle & Houghton, including different sales approaches, types of organizational structures, and effective merchandizing strategies.

Said Gary Daigle: "It helped immensely to have worked in other businesses. I am a self-starter and I learned how to develop a market. And I had self-confidence because I had proven to myself that I could make a difference in other businesses."

There were also unique problems, especially the company's location at the end of the highway.

As the company pushed southward and developed new clientele, more and more customers were forced to travel further and further for service. This had always been an issue that Daigle & Houghton had battled. Gary and Greg worked on it as best they could. They sent service people out on weekends to perform maintenance at a customer site. They sold parts out of the trunk of their car to those who needed. They built loyal relationships.

"I was doing business with small business owners in Sebec, Dover-Foxcroft, Millinocket, Bangor and all over," Gary said. "They were actually driving their equipment to Fort Kent for repairs. You stop and think about that. A lot of those customers were driving out of their way for 200 miles to service their equipment with us. It was 400 miles if they had to leave the equipment. We were still keeping their business, but it was only a matter of time before someone began to chip away at that."

As that issue festered, success continued.

Daigle and Houghton added eight service bays and 8,000 square feet of space in Fort Kent, and picked up other lines of business.

Finally, in 1997, the Western Star dealership became available in the Bangor area. Per an earlier agreement, Daigle & Houghton had first crack at it. After some deliberation, they took the biggest gamble in company history and opened a 25,000-square-foot sales and service center on the Colebrook Road in Hermon.

"It was a harrowing decision," Greg said. "When you are well situated and comfortable and then make a major move into a new, highly competitive area, it takes some discussion."

But, like their Husson education, the move has paid off. It gave them a beachhead in a larger market and allowed them to service existing customers. It has also helped them diversify into highway, logging, purchase and delivery, school transportation and transportation-related products.

The two brothers now spend at least two days a week working in Hermon to make sure there is always an owner onsite.

But when the days are done, they can still head back home to Fort Kent. And they can get someone else to shovel the roof.

Tom Gardner

Scott Gardner

The Gardners

As a youth growing up in the rural Penobscot County town of Lincoln, Tom Gardner loved trucks; loved everything about them.

He worked after school and summers for his dad's business; riding around in big dump trucks that drove deep into the Northern Maine forests and climbing on massive bulldozers that helped blaze new roads for paper companies: "I grew up in the dirt," he said. "And I loved it."

Sometimes dirt pays off.

Today, 41-year-old Tom '82 ΚΔΦ, and his brother, 39-year-old Scott '87 ΚΔΦ, have taken that childhood fascination, mixed it with a dedication to hometown, family, a passion for hard work, and a Husson College education to help transform W.T. Gardner and Sons and its various offshoots into one of the most important businesses in the area. All told, Gardner-owned companies employ more than 250 people, own upwards of 100,000 acres of timberland and control assets — including a wood harvesting and transportation operation, a sawmill, three chip mills, several gravel pits, and a land management company — worth well in excess of $100 million. There are often more than 300 applications in the office for the handful of jobs that may open during the year. Dozens of small area businesses also work closely with the Gardner Companies, from local truck dealers to woodlot owners.

Although the company typically chooses to keep a low profile — neither its Lincoln office nor its company pickup trucks bear the company name — three of its most visible operations are the Chester Forest Products sawmill and the Gardner Chipmills in Lincoln and Millinocket. At Chester Forest Products, about 40 employees cut lumber to ship down the eastern seaboard and produce coveted high-grade mulch from hemlock bark. In a nod to twenty-first century efficiency, no piece of a tree is wasted. Depending on quality and type, they may cut ties, studs, boards, chips and/or mulch from any log. Across the road from the sawmill sits the Lincoln chip mill where, with the first blush of spring, one can see acres of lesser-quality timber stacked and ready for chipping. Most chips from this plant, in excess of 70 percent, are delivered to Lincoln Pulp and Paper. The sister chip mill in Millinocket delivers most of its production to the Domtar mill in Woodland.

"I think sometimes Dad has to sit back and really think about how the business has grown and what the gravel hauling company he started over forty years ago has become today," Tom Gardner said. "A lot has changed."

On the other hand, some things don't change. The Gardner family remains heavily involved in the forest products industry and rooted in Northern Maine. For generations, the family has earned its living off one of the state's greatest assets — the Maine forest.

Tom and Scott's great grandfather, Tom, better known as "Papa Tom," was a well-known Maine guide in the Allagash. His clients included Red Sox legend and expert fisherman Ted Williams and Boston Celtics star Bob Cousy.

The brothers' grandfather, Hubert Gardner, worked as a river driver of sturdy North Woods stock. Hubert poled his way up and down the Allagash and St. John rivers to help stock woods camps with food and supplies for loggers. He also operated a farm along the Allagash.

It was Hubert's son, William "Bill" T. Gardner, who made the break from the Allagash in the 1950s. With no school available beyond eighth grade, he left home as a teenager to live with his uncle, Parker Henderson, in Lincoln. Bill attended Mattanawcook Academy and worked in his uncle's general store selling everything from bread to hardware. In 1961, he started a local gravel and hauling business. "Dad (and he passed this down to Scott and me) was just a very hard worker with a strong work ethic. He felt those qualities could take him a long way," Tom Gardner said. "He soon bought a couple of trucks, hired a guy to work with him and just kept rolling along."

Bill Gardner, who still helps run the company, grew his business, albeit conservatively, throughout the 1960s and 1970s. His foresight led to a critical decision point in the late 1960s when he shifted his company's focus to hauling logs out of the woods — via the famed Golden Road (a road he helped build) — for paper companies and established a service facility in Millinocket. By the early 1980s, W.T. Gardner and Sons had grown considerably, employing more than 25 people, but essentially focused on the same business— off-road hauling — as when it started. However, times were changing.

Tom Gardner literally grew up in the family business during the late 1960s and 1970s. His office, in addition to the many photographs of trucks and equipment, includes a black and white picture of Scott and him as toddlers standing on the bumper of one of his dad's vehicles — the W.T. Gardner nameplate clearly visible in the background. Tom worked for his father throughout his school years. He was a decent student who typically threw himself into high school sports, especially football in which he starred as a running back.

Throughout high school, the possibility of a full-time job and career in the family business obviously remained an option, but was not one forced upon either Tom or Scott.

"He never pushed us into it," Tom said. "But I guess it is just kind of in your blood."

Before making the company his career, Tom felt he needed a formal business education to supplement his wealth of on-the-job forestry experience. He chose Husson College.

"I didn't want to go out of state," Tom Gardner said. "I already had a lot of hands-on knowledge about forest issues and knew I needed to get a good business background as well. I also knew that Husson turned out some very good people." Husson also turned him into a more disciplined student and, as a result, a more disciplined executive.

"I went there and after the first month or so I was shocked," he noted. "I said, 'Tom, this isn't high school. You had better buckle down.' Sometimes it seems that I lived in the library."

At Husson, both he and Scott were brothers at Kappa Delta Phi and enjoyed college life. Tom graduated in 1982 and dove into the business.

"When I got out of Husson I came back and started right in, working 60- to 70-hour work weeks," he said. "These were good years. The economy was booming and I just needed to get to know everything I could about the company. I wanted to know what every piece of equipment did and I wanted to understand everything we could possibly do. I pushed pretty hard to keep the company growing."

Like his brother Tom, Scott Gardner loved the family business . . . hanging out and working whenever possible. His work hours picked up in eighth grade and, the woods being what they were, he could work on machinery as a teenager.

"It was interesting in the summer, all your friends were down at the lake doing this and that and we were up in the middle of the woods running a crane or driving a truck," said Scott Gardner.

Not that life was all work. Scott also played three sports in high school, maintained decent grades and thoroughly enjoyed teenage life in Northern Maine such as riding dirt bikes, snowmobiles, and water-skiing.

After high school, Scott did not immediately attend Husson; he took a year off to work. It was actually when Husson called his father and inquired about his second son that Scott decided it was time for college.

"I decided I really needed a business education and I needed to enjoy being young," Scott said.

Scott, who was inspired by some of his Husson instructors, earned a bachelor's degree in Business Administration in 1987. However, despite attending college in Bangor, he was never far from the business.

"With summers off and all the vacations, I still worked a lot and set up my classes so I could get back when needed," he said. "I would run back during the week with parts for the business and likewise run equipment parts to Bangor for service when I returned on Sundays. I could also make 'mayday' runs whenever necessary."

Without missing a beat, he returned to Lincoln after college, ready to take on the world.

Soon, he was supervising the cutting operations and began spending most of his time in the woods – typically leaving on Sunday and not returning to "civilization" until Friday. He continued this rugged work for most of the next 10 years.

The hard work, though, was all paying off.

By the early 1990s, both Scott and Tom were deeply involved in a growing company that would only grow more. They had watched paper companies begin to outsource their logging operations and quickly capitalized by expanding their business to cutting and managing timber in 1987. They took over parts of Great Northern's Telos and Lobster logging operations, acquired property and continued to add equipment and employees to handle their rapidly growing operations. They also concentrated on hiring excellent managers to help run the business.

Throughout this era, business played out against constant concerns about the stability of various mills and other economic factors. As a result of the uncertainty, which continues, they also moved aggressively in the 1990s to diversify W.T. Gardner and develop new revenue streams that were not directly tied to the paper and pulp mills.

Among the moves they spearheaded were:

- Forming Gardner Logging Services in 1987 to manage logging operating on their own land and land owned by others.
- Forming Gardner Land Company in 1994 to acquire, manage, cut and, if necessary, develop its own timber acreage.
- Building Gardner Chipmills Lincoln in 1996 and Gardner Chipmills Millinocket in 1997 at cost in excess of $10 million each.
- Purchasing Chester Forest Products in 2001 to expand into the sawmill business.

"We were really working hard to grow that fast," Scott Gardner said. "You grow with the times and the times had changed. Some things were opening up. Basically, you had to always be looking out for the next door to open and when it did, you had to move fast. You still do."

The result has been a diversification that is still developing and is seen as critical. The company is now only 50 percent tied to the paper industry, but that still causes economic ups and downs.

There is nothing the men feel they can't weather with good decisions and an alert eye to opportunity. After all, they don't plan to go anywhere.

Tom and Michelle, his wife of nearly 20 years, have three children, including two football-playing sons who have adopted his old number — 30 — and a daughter. Tom will help coach the high school football team this fall and helped carve an 18-hole golf course — JaTo Highlands — out of old cattle land in town. The golf course, which he worked with his father-in-law to design and build, rolls along in the shadows of majestic Mount Katahdin. Some holes overlook the famed Penobscot River, once the artery of commerce that delivered timber to old Bangor when it stood as the lumber capital of the world.

Scott and his wife Hallie, also have three children — two sons and one daughter — all younger than 11. Scott is also dedicated to the community and helps direct resources to community projects when possible. "We recognize what our home town has done for us and we like to give back," he said.

Said Tom Gardner, "The family is very established in town and Lincoln is very comfortable to live in. It has everything you want."

Including two Husson College graduates helping to keep the economy and the community rolling along.

Husson To Choose New Mascot

We need your help.

Native American culture has been part of Husson folklore. From childhood, Chesley Husson was called Chief and he became an honorary member of the Penobscot Nation. Until 1990 we had locations on campus such as the Arrowhead, the Wigwam, the Tomahawk, and we celebrated Chief Week. Husson sports teams were first known as Indians and then Braves. Since 1990 we began to phase out the use of the head dress and tomahawk as symbols, but the name Braves and Lady Braves remains. While not an issue of political correctness, the use of Native American images for mascots is an increasing concern to the NCAA. We have decided to choose a new mascot for the college and we need your input.

New Mascot

The timeline to choose the new mascot looks like this: this summer we want to hear from you, our alumni. You can email your suggestions or comments to mascot@husson.edu or you can fill out the form in this Ledger and mail it to us. In a few weeks a letter will be mailed to all day school students providing them with the same opportunity. Staff and faculty will be polled and all those suggestions will be included.

During September the submissions will be narrowed down by the mascot committee to the top three and voting will begin and last through October 15. You will be able to vote on line, through the mail or by telephone. The new mascot will be introduced in the late Fall of 2003 and implementation will be phased in over the 03/04 academic years.

This is a major change for Husson. Though our mission to provide educational opportunities for students remains the same, it is time to present a new image. From our beginning as a small proprietary school located in downtown Bangor, Husson has become the largest private educator of Maine students. We offer degrees in four schools and are beginning discussions for our first doctoral program. It is an exciting time here on campus and we are proud of our progress. Let's take the next step!

Jody E. Vail, Administrative Assistant in the Registrar's Office, received her Bachelor of Science in Business Administration.

Congratulations to all of you!

Paul Husson, Director for Alumni Affairs and International Center for Language Studies (ICLS), gave the graduation address at Aomori Univeristy, Aomori, Japan in March. Husson College and Aomori University have a formal university relationship. Aomori Prefecture and the State of Maine are sister states.

Dr. Teresa Steele, Dean of the School of Health, met with United States Senator Susan Collins in her Washington office on March 24, 2003, to discuss the AACN recommendations to address the nursing shortage and the need to increase funding for nursing workforce development. Prior to becoming a member of the Senate, Collins worked at Husson as the Founding Director of the Richard E. Dyke Center for Family Business.

Husson Fellows Transform the College

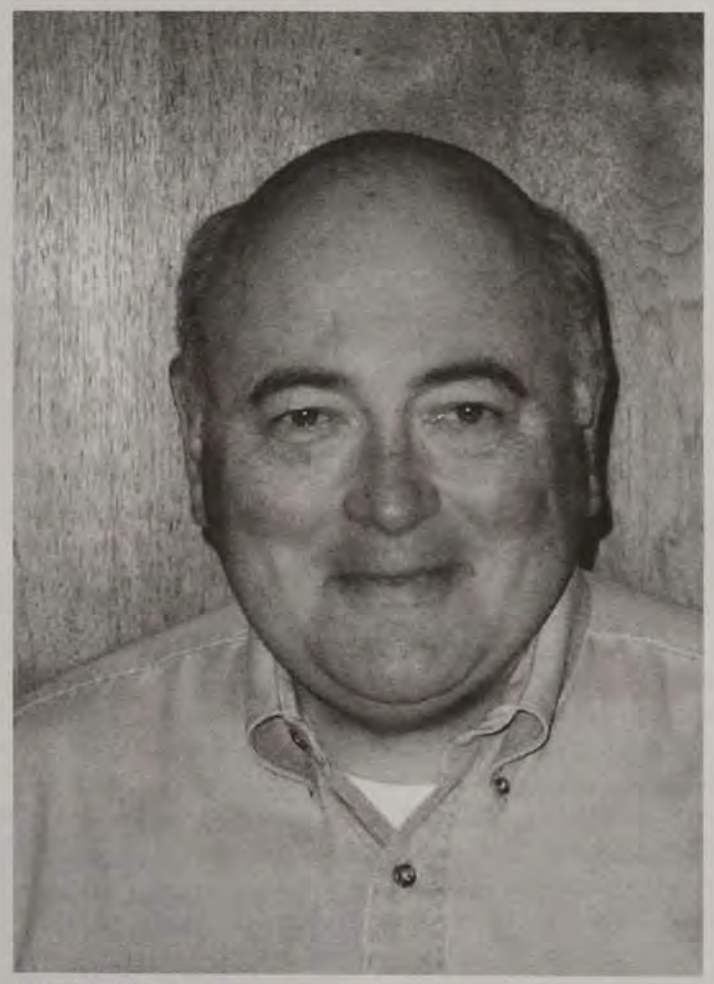

Several years ago Husson president William Beardsley passed a blank envelope to Dr. John Winkin at a Rotary luncheon and casually said, "Coach, could you take a look at this some time?" Winkin, who had recently departed from his baseball coaching position at the University of Maine glanced at the note and then put it away. That afternoon Dr. Winkin arrived at Husson and the concept of a Husson Fellow was born. What Beardsley had proposed was a Husson Fellow in Sports Leadership. Today, Husson Fellows include Winkin, Dr. Mary Ann Haas, Dr. Julian Haynes and Dr. Paul LaMarche.

Dr. John Winkin

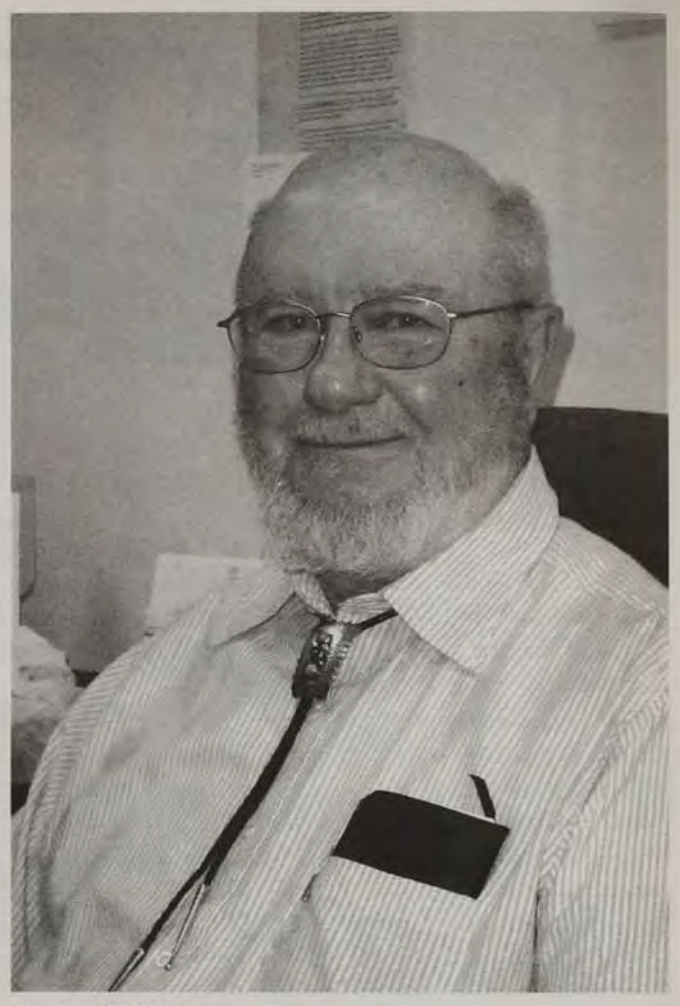

"Husson faculty, students, and staff need mentors. I need mentors," said Beardsley. "So, starting with John Winkin, we had created the concept of a Husson Fellow to honor individuals who do not seek employment responsibilities, commitments to hours or schedules, but who seek to share their executive experiences, extraordinary expertise, and leadership qualities with others in a collegial environment. We provide office, computer, honorariums, expenses, and an open door into the heart of our little college and then we pray," said Beardsley. Today, there are four Husson Fellows and the prayers are being answered in ways one never expected.

Around Winkin, the Husson Fellow in Sports Leadership, a multi-million dollar sports complex is emerging and high school and college students are exposed to Coach Winkin's talks on leadership, coaching, patriotism, sports and faith. For Winkin, who is in his seventieth year of jogging three miles per day, this informal relationship has evolved into a formal teaching and coaching position. Dr. Winkin, who served as a captain in the U.S. Navy during World War II, was Director of Athletics at Colby College, continues to publish books on coaching for the U. S. Coaching Association.

Dr. Julian Haynes

Dr. Paul LaMarche, the Husson Fellow in Medical Sciences, is a renowned pediatrician who was founding director of the Rhode Island Genetic Research Institute and was director of medicine for Eastern Maine Medical Center. He mentors junior research faculty and has built a small genetics research lab. For LaMarche, the position has enabled him to pursue personal research in lymphodemia. Dr. LaMarche, also serves as president of the Maine Lymphodemia Network and founded the Maine Toxicology Network.

Dr. Paul LaMarche

"Mary Ann and I are just getting settled in", said Dr. Julian Haynes, the Husson Fellow in Academic Planning. "It's too early to know where all of this is going to lead but certainly Husson is providing a platform for wonderful new adventures." Haynes is doing research to conceptualize the evolution of Husson into a doctoral university. Haynes has known an illustrious career which includes heading the American Diatetic Association, as a dean at the University of Maine, provost at Massachusetts General Hospital, Chairman of the Board of Anatolia College in Greece and serving as the senior aide for education to U.S. Senator Susan Collins.

Dr. Mary Ann Haas, the Husson Fellow in Governance and Organizational Development, was formerly associate chancellor and for two decades served as clerk of the University of Maine System Board of Trustees She raises horses and loves to garden and once served as head of women's athletics at the University of Maine. Dr. Haas is engaged in strategic planning and in building bridges to the greater Bangor Community. "These are extraordinary individuals who come to Husson at their leisure and who spread wisdom and what it means to give something back to the community and state they love. We and the Bangor community are beneficiaries", said Beardsley. As for future Husson Fellows, President Beardsley just shrugs. "It isn't planned. It's all pretty spontaneous. It's serendipity. Individually, our Husson Fellows are extraordinary people. Collectively they scare me - they are changing the institution in ways we never expected. They are like a priesthood of visionaries and scholars. We'll just have to wait and see."

Jonathan "Gabby" Price Named Husson Athletic Director; Pam Hennessey Accepts Faculty Appointment

Husson College Dean of Education James Doughty '61 ΚΔΦ has announced that Jonathan "Gabby" Price has been named as the new Athletic Director. Price takes over for long-time A.D. Pam Hennessey, who resigned that position to accept a faculty appointment in the School of Education.

Hennessey, who has been athletic director at Husson since 1986, felt it was time for a change. "I have been at Husson since 1968 and I look forward to sharing my experiences and knowledge with students in the classroom", said Hennessey. "My interest has shifted towards academics, and this seemed like the best time to make the move. Gabby is a wonderful choice and has my full support."

Jonathan "Gabby" Price was named head football coach at Husson in February of 2002. He is a graduate of Bangor High School and the University of Maine. He taught in the Bangor School system from 1973 to 1985. He served as assistant football coach at Bangor High School from 1973 to 1975. He was head coach from 1976 until 1984 and again from 1992 to 2000 taking the Bangor Rams to two state championships. The Husson Football team will open their first season with a homecoming game against Mt. Ida on Saturday, September 20.

"Trying to fill Pam's shoes, who has been at Husson for 35 years, 17 of them as athletic director, will be a great challenge," said Price. "Under her guidance the Athletic Department at Husson has accomplished many great things such as adding new sports, new facilities, joining a new conference, as well as her being a role model and genuine leader for women in athletics. Pam displayed great leadership and effort in moving Husson College to NCAA Division III. Her sound and practical mentoring will be missed. All of us are happy that she will continue to be part of Husson College," said Price.

Jonathan "Gabby" Price hugs outgoing Husson College athletic director Pam Hennessey after being named her successor at a press conference in the Hall of Fame room at the college.

During her tenure at Husson, Hennessey has coached women's basketball and softball. She was named the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics A.D. of the Year for Northeast Region Schools. She has served as Chair of the Northeast Region 10 for the NAIA, Chair of the National Conduct and Ethics Committee and served as Secretary of the Athletic Directors Association. She also served as Regional Supervisor for men's golf, baseball and softball and served on the National Council of Athletic Administrators. She has taught mathematics, English composition, psychology, health education, sports management courses, sociology and speech.

"I love coaching, but I am truly looking forward to taking on the added responsibility of Athletic Director," said Price. "I feel this is a great time for Husson College and Husson Athletics. My goal for the Athletic Department is to always do what is best for our student athletes." Price went on to say, "We have a great staff here in the Athletic Department and I look forward to working with each of them." President William Beardsley said, "Obviously this is a win-win situation for Husson. Having Pam on the faculty full time is exciting. Her wealth of experience will help us train the next generation of Athletic Directors."

Kissy Walker Returns to Coaching "I'm excited to be back, I missed coaching"

After a two year hiatus, Mary "Kissy" Walker has returned to coach the Husson women's basketball team. Husson Dean of Education Jim Doughty announced Monday, June 2 that Walker has agreed to return to coaching.

Walker stepped down as coach to pursue her Master's Degree at Husson, which she will complete this August, and concentrate on her new responsibilities as Clinical Education Coordinator in the Department of Education. Walker also is mother to a 2 year old foster son she is trying to adopt.

"I'm excited to be back, I missed coaching," she said. "The opportunity has presented itself for me to return to coaching and I've decided to take it. I have two great assistant coaches in Randy Dodge and Jamel Brown Jones and I think it's going to be fun. Harold Williams, who coached these past two years, has recruited a great freshman class and I can't wait to get started."

"I took the time to work out my priorities," Walker said. "With my family, my position at Husson and now this coaching job, my plate is full. But, with all the support I have around me I'm confident that we can do this right. The team is making the change from the Sunrise Conference to the North Atlantic Conference. It's an exciting time and the tradition of Husson basketball is something I'm proud to be a part of."

Walker has a 235-95 record that includes four trips to NAIA Division II National Tournament, including an unprecedented berth in the final four in 1993.

Commencement Continued

The Portland ceremony was held on May 17, where one hundred students graduated including 18 who received their master of science in Business. Portland Police Chief Michael Chitwood delivered the commencement address and received the Chesley Husson Award for service. The citation read in part; In recognition of passion for life and love of family, leadership by example, commitment to serving and protecting his community and advocacy for what he believes, the trustees, administration, faculty and students bestow the cherished Chesley H. Husson award upon Michael Chitwood.

Two students received special recognition at the Portland ceremony. Named outstanding student in an A.S. program was Wendy L. Ferrante of Scarborough, Maine. Named outstanding student in a B.S. program was Joan P. Theriault of Portland, Maine.

In Bangor, the commencement speaker was Owen Wells, president of the Libra Foundation. Wells was presented an honorary doctorate in humanities. "It is for Owen Wells's faith in humanity, innovative approach to service, and love of the common man that Husson College honors him," said Husson president William Beardsley. "He has the special opportunity and responsibility of overseeing the Libra Foundation, a philanthropic endowment established by the last Elizabeth Noyce," Beardsley said. "Through this oversight he has added an extraordinary human dimension to giving in Maine."

Wells concluded by saying, "success means taking risks. Our lives improve only when we take chances. You have all taken a risk. You've made an investment with your time, money and sanity for your future through education. Education is the most important catalyst for the types of success I have mentioned today. By sitting here, you have accomplished one of the greatest success- a college degree."

"Many years ago I sat where you sit now, in an audience of graduates participating in a ceremony, wearing the same silly hat, and I can say with grave certainty, that your education is your ticket to success. Your education is yours to keep forever."

Keun Pyo "Kay" Hong received an honorary doctorate in education. Dr. Hong's story is truly remarkable. A native of Korea, she spent the first 15 years of her life in extreme poverty. At age 15, along with her sister, she escaped from North to South Korea riding on the top of a boxcar. She completed high school with a desire to become a nurse. Yet, North Korea invaded the south and once again Kay Hong escaped southward with the fleeing South Korean armies helping to nurse their wounds as best she could. She was alone as a refugee in a nation at civil war.

Canadian missionaries found Kay hungry and ill. She traveled to Canada and with their help enrolled in a diploma nursing program. She went on to receive B.A. in public administration and a certificate in advanced practical obstetrics and midwifery at the University of Alberta. She married, gave birth to her first child and worked as a staff nurse at Princeton Medical Center. Yet, her heart remained in Korea, and in 1956 she and her family returned to Korea, where she raised two sons and a daughter, pursued her profession and continued her education, going on the earn her M.A. and Ph.D. in nursing science at Yonsei University.

She rose through the ranks from clinical instructor, to lecturer, associate professor and head of the nursing department at Ewha University. In 1989 she became Dean of the Christian College of Nursing in Gwangju, transforming a small provincial institution into a premier academic institution with ties and affiliations across the world, including Husson College. 19 students from South Korea received their BSN from Husson this May. Today, known throughout Korea by the endearing and respectful names "my nurse" and "my teacher," Dr. Kay Hong is revered as one who transformed nursing education in Korea.

Miranda Elizabeth Brodeur was named valedictorian of the graduating class. Brodeur, from Millinocket, Maine, received a B.S. in Paralegal Studies and graduated with a 3.97 g.p.a. Tabitha Jean Bard from Leeds, Maine, was named salutatorian. Bard, who was president of the senior class, received a B.S. in Accounting and a Master of Science in Business. She graduated with a 3.95 g.p.a.

In his commencement address Wells encouraged the students to remember one word- success. "Why do we mark these occasions," he asked? "We celebrate because you graduates have worked hard and have sacrificed to pay for your education. You've been given the tools, now make success your mantra."

"Success means being motivated to begin the day. Think about what motivates you and choose your profession carefully. Success means being part of progress. The future belongs to those who build it. Take your degree and look at it as a ticket to serve rather than being served."

PLEASE WELCOME OUR NEW ALUMNI

Dear Graduates,

Graduation from college is a significant passage in life. It is not simply the learning and preparation for careers, but also the memories and friendships that will last a lifetime.

As graduates you are now part of a network of 12,000 Husson alumni who live across Maine and around the world and that network can help you succeed in your career or enrich the quality of life for others. You, in turn, will be one of Husson's ambassadors to the world and we as a college will come to be known by your good works and deeds.

Best wishes, good luck, keep in touch and welcome to the Husson Alumni family.

Sincerely,
William H. Beardsley, President

Hi. My name is Chebet Chelule. My father, Julius Kipkorir Chelule '72, attended Husson College class of 1972. I came to the U.S. after high school in Kenya to attend college in Houston, Texas. I graduated college nearly five years ago and work as a technical consultant for SCT Corporation in San Diego, California. For the last nine years that I've been in the U.S., I've really wanted to visit Bangor and see where my father attended school I think it's quite extraordinary that today I decided to look up your website and saw my father's name under Missing Alumni. What a small world!

When my father graduated from Husson College, he moved back to Kenya. He got married to Zeddy Chepkirui in 1973 and had a very successful diplomatic career till the early 80s. He was mostly posted to Europe. He and my mother had three children. I'm the first born, 29. I'll be getting married December 6, 2003. My brother, Brian Kipngeno Korir, is 22 and my sister, Cheryl Chepngetich Chelule, is 19. Both of them are attending college in Houston.

After his years with the diplomatic corp, he moved back to Kenya and worked for the Government as Senior Ministry acountant and later Chief Accountant of the Ministry. The ministries are the equivalent of Departments in the U.S. My father at that time had high blood pressure and was diabetic. In 1988, due to years of diabetes, his kidneys failed. In that year, he was flown to England and had a kidney transplant. He, however, died on September 25, 1989.

He was a wonderful father and had interesting stories about his life in the U.S. and the friendly people he'd met in Bangor, Maine. It's because of my father having attended Husson, that I had the dream to go to college in the U.S. Through the years, he actually kept in close contact with Patrick Kirby and his wife. I think they may have taught at Husson. My mum wrote them for a while but lost touch a few years ago. I know they were aging. Do let us know if anyone knows what became of them.

Anyway, I just wanted to solve the mystery of one of your Alumni. Thank you for just bringing back a flood of memories of my father. I hope the long email helps give a story to what was previously just a name on the list. God Bless. Regards, Chebet

THE CHESLEY H. HUSSON, SR. SOCIETY

The Chesley H. Husson, Sr. Society recognizes those generous donors who remember Husson College in their will and/or through any one of numerous planned giving instruments. The Society provides continuing recognition to those who obviously care about Husson's future financial strength, and membership in the Society is listed annually. The Husson Society also recognizes individuals or families who have established named, endowed scholarship funds to carry on their legacy of generosity to Husson College students.

The Society's name honors the man who gave Husson both his name and its nonprofit independent status. It is especially appropriate when you consider that Chief's own planned gift made it all possible. This Society continues to give focus and on-going attention to all forms of planned giving as important means of supporting the College.

In order to be recognized as a member of the Society, donors need to notify the College of completed arrangements which include Husson in their will or which provide for the college via a planned gift (a trust, IRA beneficiary, insurance beneficiary, an annuity, gift of real estate, etc.). For information about the Society or details concerning various options, donors may phone the Husson Development Office at 207-973-1036.
