Husson -- a sense of place

by President William H. Beardsley

The Hillman farmhouse
--now home to President and Mrs. Beardsley

The Campus

The Campus Center, the first major construction in 25 years, provides an opportunity to reflect on Husson's history of bricks and mortar. We must go back a century to the Bass Block on the corner of Franklin and Hammond Street, home to the Shaw Business College, and to Bangor General Hospital, home to the nursing school. As these two schools grew--one in business, one of health--the Hillman family expanded their dairy farm on outer Broadway.

Husson eventually moved to Park Street hill, and the nursing school took up residency in what is now the Riverside Inn on the banks of the Penobscot River adjacent to Eastern Maine Medical Center. Finally, in 1968, exactly seventy years after founder Frank Shaw shared his vision that "every individual should have a chance to develop sufficiently the skills needed to provide for a better way of life," Chesley Husson opened the "new campus" on the pasture lands of the Hillman Farm.

The restlessness of place has quieted over the past 26 years.

The Campus Center

But time marches on, the college experienced growth and expanded into programs in health. Students expressed an aspiration for the campus to become "more like home". Nationally renowned campus planner, Richard Dober, worked with Husson alumnus/architect John Rohman '77, to conceptualize the campus revitalization. The marble entrance sign was followed by an honors dorm in Bell Hall. Kominsky Auditorium was upgraded with renovations and a Steinway grand piano. A chapel has emerged with protestant donations, Catholic pews and Baptist windows, a testament to ecumenicalism. The micro art gallery provides a showplace for local artists. What was once the Wigwam is now designed to become a marketplace of ideas--a place to talk, eat and debate, what the ancient Greeks call "The Agora". The formal lounge is graced by a massive granite fireplace, performance floor and outside patio. The multipurpose center was dedicated at Homecoming.

At one time, this was the nursing school. Currently, it is known as the Riverside Inn.

Park Street hill

Changes continue. The Sports Hall of Fame is underway in the athletic complex while new science and physical therapy labs are scheduled for construction. The University of Maine School of Forestry is developing a plan for the Husson Forest, 100 acres of red and white pine plantation, mixed hardwoods, wetlands and streams. There are also plans to construct the Center for Family Business on the rise at the entrance to the campus, testament to the college commitment to Maine business.

The Westbrook Connection

Finally, lest we forget Husson's statewide presence, the college has relocated its 500 Portland graduate and undergraduate adult degree students. Their new home, as of August 1, 1995, is the Westbrook College campus in Portland, one of the prettiest collegiate environments in the state. The students and degrees remain Husson's but this new relationship with Westbrook opens opportunities for expanding educational opportunities in southern Maine. Though smaller, the college's outreach centers in Lewiston and Caribou provide Husson with a continuing education and graduate presence to the north and south.

Husson's new Campus Center

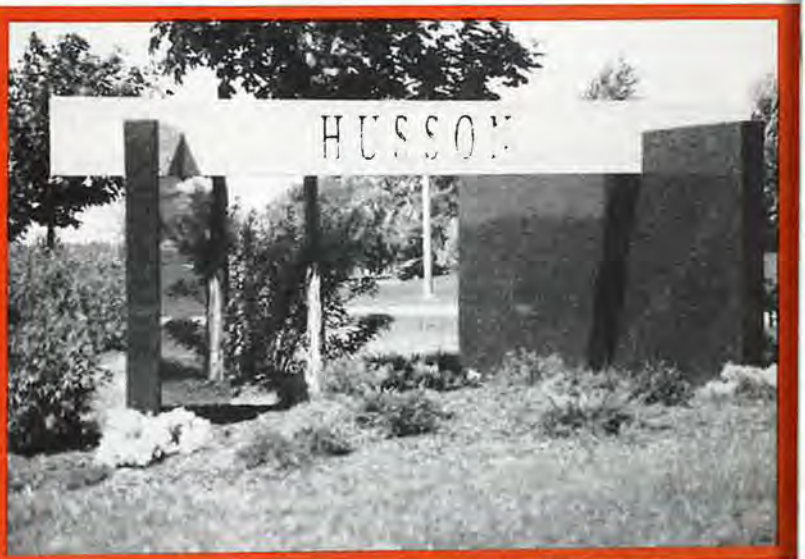

The Future

What does the future hold? In fact, the focus lies in fully utilizing existing facilities, in adding state-of-the-art technology and laboratories, in enriching what we already have. But we have also learned that this is a fast-paced world in which we live and the college must stay current. And just as we visualize bricks and mortar we find that in Husson's statewide fiber optic network, with access to Internet and the URSUS library system, we have opportunities to pursue the concept of a college without walls. It is a never ending challenge, dreams tempered by technical needs and resource realities, and a world of opportunities waiting to be found and nourished.

That, in a nutshell, is Husson's sense of place.

The building boom

The building boom that's taking place on the Husson College campus is concrete evidence that the college is as alive as it ever has been and is well ready to begin its second century preparing men and women for professional careers in Maine and beyond.

The most visible sign of the construction taking place on campus is the new Campus Center addition to the rear of Peabody Hall. The project, one of the key elements of The Campaign for Husson, is the first major new construction on the campus since the present campus was built in 1968.

The addition almost doubles the size of the existing gathering space in Peabody Hall and provides a pleasant, informal place for students, faculty and staff to meet, eat, study or just relax. Dominating one wall of the addition is a large, granite fireplace that is the focal point of the Campus Center and a central gathering place for the Husson community.

The college's dining service continues to serve food throughout the day and diners have the option of eating outdoors in the new patio area that is part of the project.

In addition to the new construction, the project has renovated a portion of the existing area in Peabody, updating the Student Government office and the faculty dining room. The project also has created an ecumenical chapel featuring beautiful stained glass windows and a small art gallery for the campus.

"The center has been designed to bring people together," said John Rubino, the dean for student affairs at Husson. "This is a place where students, faculty and staff can come to socialize, to study, to eat or to just hang out."

Rubino said the additional space will allow the college to bring more student activities onto the campus and provides an area for individual and small group performances.

As the Campus Center project draws to a close, crews are already preparing to continue renovations in Bell Hall. This portion of the Bell Hall renovation will create teaching lab space for the nursing and physical therapy programs.

According to Dr. Sandra Curwin, the director of the college's new Physical Therapy program, the renovations will be done in two phases. The first will concentrate on the second level of the building and will create labs that will be shared by the two programs. The labs on this level will be used for teaching patient treatment skills.

The lower level of Bell will house the anatomy labs, which Curwin said are essential to the Physical Therapy program.

"That's the bedrock for everything physical therapists do," she said. "It's the big building block that all of physical therapy is based on."

The two projects involve stripping both levels down to the bare walls and, in some areas, knocking out walls to transform former dormitory rooms into a larger laboratory.

The upper level labs should be completed in time to be used by the first class of Physical Therapy students in the new program. The anatomy labs, however, are more complicated and require the addition of a refrigeration area. Curwin said she hoped that area would be completed sometime next summer.

"That will give us time to bring in the equipment and set it up before the students need to begin working in the labs," she said.

The college has been steadily updating the building since the federal Job Corps program moved out in 1994. Once the current project is completed, the college will have renovated all nine levels of the building.

Bell Hall now houses the nursing faculty and staff, administrative offices and the Institutional Advancement Department, including Public Relations, and one entire wing of student residence rooms--Husson's honors dorm. It is also the home of the Bangor Symphony Orchestra administrative offices.

Another exciting development is the plan for a new building to house the College's innovative Center for Family Business. Trustee Richard Dyke '58 MΣX of Windham, a successful entrepreneur, has generously donated $250,000 toward the cost of a freestanding, 5,000 square foot building. Architectural drawings have been completed, and fundraising to cover the costs is proceeding.

The building, which will be located on the knoll between Bell Hall and the main entrance to the campus, will be a visible sign of Husson's commitment to Maine's 30,000 family businesses. It will house the seminars offered by the Center and will also include a resource room with materials, whether in print, video, or computer format, that will assist a business person in such tasks as writing a business plan or in developing a succession plan.

The college community is proud of all the improvements that are taking place on the campus these days, and that pride is the cornerstone for a new, volunteer committee that's been working recently to beautify the campus. The Campus Beautification Committee grew out of individual efforts to "spruce up" the campus.

"We did a little weeding in front of Peabody Hall," said Nancy Bubar, one of the committee members. "As people saw what a difference that made, more people got involved. That's when Joyce Goodine '66, '95 ΔΣΔ suggested that we form the committee."

Bubar said the focus of the committee is to maintain and beautify the campus grounds.

"What we hope to do is to look at what we've got and to make sure that it is maintained. That means weeding flower beds, making sure there's no long grass growing around them. And then we want to look at different ways in which we can beautify the campus."

The committee sponsored a campus cleanup day which drew more volunteers from the Husson community to weed, mulch and plant around the campus. The beautification program has drawn interest from groups and individuals on campus. The School of Business donated funds for planting around the Husson sign at the entrance to the campus. The Admissions Department donated funds for beautifying the entrances to Hart and Carlisle Halls, and the New England School of Broadcasting donated funds for planting at the rear entrance to Peabody Hall near the commuter parking lot. Accounting professor Dewey Martin donated a blue spruce tree planted on the hill by Carlisle dorm.

Other departments got into the beautification spirit and did some work on their own. Members of the nursing department donned their green jeans and added plants and flowers at one entrance to Bell Hall, and the folks on the Administrative wing in Bell did the same at the entrance to their floor.

According to Bubar, that's the kind of spirit the committee hopes to encourage throughout the campus community. Committee members already have discussed some long-range plans, and hope to involve students in the beautification program.

"We're hoping that the student groups on campus, the fraternities and the sororities, will want to get involved with this program," she said. "They could be a big help, either by raising money for projects or by adopting an area of the campus and taking care of it."

Among the long-range plans the committee has discussed are: work on the Bell Tower garden, plants and shrubs around the new Campus Center, planting more maples and more flowering crab trees along the sidewalks.

"We're still excited, and we hope others will be too," she said. "If the campus looks nice, people will take pride in the campus and they'll work toward making it look even better."

Trustee LaJune Means gives gifts of appreciation from the College to trustees Doug Brown and Shirley Richard '48/'55 (below, left) for their support of the new chapel. Ralph and Anita Leonard also receive gifts from Mrs. Means (middle, below) for their major gift which named the chapel in memory of their son Rick. Trustee Chairman Tom Johnston and LaJune Means greet Mr. and Mrs. Jeff Gammelin (below, right) whose firm built the fireplace.

Sae Il Lee '70

by Paul Husson

"My family is from the Yalu River Region in North Korea. Father was a business man who traded with the Chinese along the Korea-China border. When the Korean War broke out, our family fled south and ended up living near Seoul. My father started a small textile business in Yang Pyung Dong in 1953," says Sae Il Lee '70.

That business has grown to become the largest exporter of textiles in Korea, and Sae Il Lee '70 is its Chief Executive Officer. Daihan Wool Textile Corporation manufactures wool and silk textiles in three factories in Korea and employs 800 in its highly-automated, state-of-the-art facilities. High technology and automation have allowed them to reduce their workforce from 1500 to the current 800. They have recently built a new plant in Ho Chi Minh City, (formerly Saigon) Vietnam in order to remain competitive with the Chinese. Daihan is publicly traded on the Korean stock exchange.

Also, Daihan Wool Textile Company and Calsonic of Japan established a joint venture company in 1991. Daihan Calsonic's aim is "to produce quality automobile parts." Cooling units, condensers, V-6 compressors, controls and related machinery are produced in their plant in Ansan, Korea.

In 1961, I was stationed in Youngdeungpo with the 508th United States Army Security Agency. We lived in quonset huts on a very small post. Directly outside my hut, on the other side of the fence was a small factory manufacturing and dyeing cloth. I remember watching the women hanging the dyed cloth over bamboo poles to dry in the sun. Mr. Lee and I decided that this must have been the original Daihan plant operated by his father. An unwitting association of the Lee family and the Husson family!

Mr. Lee came to Husson in the summer of 1967; a transfer from Yonsei, one of Korea's oldest universities. He

by Rich Hewitt

Arthur D. Fuller has spent his whole career--almost 30 years--in the paper industry. That's not unusual for a kid who grew up in a paper mill town like Rumford, Maine. What is a little out of the ordinary is that Art Fuller now heads one of the largest newsprint producing operations in the United States.

In March, Fuller was named President of Bowater Newsprint, the newly-created division of Bowater Incorporated with headquarters in Greenville, South Carolina.

The new position represents a "significant challenge" since he will be in charge of all aspects of Bowater's newsprint business, which accounts for roughly half of the company's total production.

"With the creation of the newsprint division, the company has taken a new approach to the way we do business," Fuller said. "This will bring together all aspects of Bowater's newsprint operations, manufacturing, sales, and administration, into a single focused business unit."

In the early 60s, running a new division of an international company was an impossible dream for a young high school graduate who wasn't sure what the future would hold for him.

"I was one month out of high school and I still didn't know what I was going to do," he said. "My high school principal suggested that I look into Husson. He took two days and we went down to Bangor. We looked around and I was introduced to Clara Swan. Well, I decided to apply and I was accepted."

Fuller said that at that point, he had no idea what accounting was all about and enrolled in the accounting program at Husson on the advice of his father.

"My dad told me that I ought to take accounting because I would be sure to be challenged," he said. "He was right. It was a fairly tough course. I still remem-lived in the old Penobscot Hotel dormitory and the following year he moved to the "new campus," where he graduated in 1970. After Husson, he enrolled in the Graduate School of International Management (Thunderbird) in Arizona where he earned his Master's Degree. After graduation he took a second interview with Citibank before deciding to go into the family business. "In Korean society, it is expected that the oldest son will carry on the family business," says Mr. Lee.

Mr. Lee and I had dinner together last March in Seoul along with Mr. Park Dong Chul, the president of Dong Won Co. LTD. Mr. Park is the father of Park Chong-Hee '98, one of our current Husson students. His company also manufactures silk products.

Mr. Lee expressed a desire to visit Bangor again to see the changes of the past twenty-five years. He asks, "Do you still tie red cloth on the car antennas so that they can be seen over the snow banks?" "I particularly remember Mrs. Miller, William Curran and Clara Swan. They were good teachers and I learned a lot."

"I hope you will emphasize to students that the world is very big, and that there are a lot of opportunities waiting for them internationally. They absolutely need some sort of international business exposure," he says. Mr. Lee used an interesting expression. He says, "Students need to study aggressively." "When they are working, it is very hard to catch up on what they should have learned in college. Everyone has twenty-four hours in a day; how we divide it up is our choice."

ber Bill Donahue, who was the head of the accounting department then. He made a tremendous impression on me."

Fuller graduated from Husson with a degree in accounting and that, plus his experience in a paper mill, earned him a job at the International Paper Company.

"I had worked in the mills during the summer and that gave me an edge with IP," he said. "I think they were happy to have someone in accounting who knew what a paper machine looked like."

He worked with International Paper in Glens Falls, New York for four years. But in 1970, he decided that he wanted to get back to Maine and went to work with Great Northern Paper in Millinocket.

At Millinocket, he began to run into other Husson alumni who had used their education to build careers in the paper industry.

"When I went to work for Great Northern Nekoosa in Millinocket, Husson graduates Tom Kelly '65 ΜΣΧ, Adrian Clark '76 and Dick Bailey '65 were already there," he said. "At one point Husson graduates held the controllers positions at three of the four major paper divisions of Great Northern Nekoosa."

Fuller worked in Millinocket until 1972 when he transferred to the Great Southern Paper Company in Georgia.

"I discovered I liked the south," he said, "so I stayed."

He worked his way up through the ranks at Great Southern Paper which was Great Northern Nekoosa's container boards and packaging division, and ultimately was in charge of the company's container board mill in Cedar Springs, Georgia, then the largest paper mill in the world. He served as president and general manager of GSP from 1987-1990.

Prior to joining Bowater in January this year, he served as vice president for finance, planning and administration at MacMillan Bloedel Inc. and from 1991-1993 was a partner in NuKraft, a recycled linerboard "Mini-mill" project.

Fuller said his Husson education prepared him well for his career in the paper industry, but admitted that it wasn't until after he graduated that he realized how good an education he had received.

"Like many students, I didn't realize the education I had received until I got out into the real world," he said. "The education I received at Husson--the general business background as well as the technical accounting skills--put me in good stead to advance in the business world."

Center for Family Business holds successful seminars

More than 100 people attended the inaugural seminar offered by the new Center for Family Business at Husson. The April seminar, entitled "Building Your Family Business: The Strategies for Success from Maine's Best Entrepreneurs," featured successful business owners who discussed how they built their family enterprises.

The speakers included entrepreneurs Richard Dyke '55 ΜΣΧ of Dyke Associates in Windham, Kathie Leonard of Auburn Manufacturing in Mechanic Falls, and Thomas Moser of Tho. Moser Cabinetmakers in Auburn, who have successfully started their own businesses, as well as Gene Geiger of Geiger Brothers in Lewiston and Lois Nealley of Snow and Nealley in Hampden, who represented fourth and fifth generation family businesses.

The Center's second seminar, "For Love and Money: Managing Conflict in Family Businesses," was held in September and was also well-attended. People in family businesses often discover that their biggest challenges are interpersonal issues. The business can impose strains on family relationships, and family members can create problems for the business. The seminar explored these and similar issues.

Speakers included Maine business owners Martha Dudman of Ellsworth and Greg Freeman of Presque Isle as well as a nationally known psychologist and an estate planning attorney. They presented specific strategies for family businesses to use in resolving conflicts, whether it is poor performance by the son of the owner or a dispute between family members involved in the business and those who are not.

Husson's Center for Family Business intends to be the premiere source of educational assistance and information for and about family businesses in Maine. The State has some 30,000 family-owned enterprises, ranging in size from L.L. Bean to the "Mom-and-Pop" general stores throughout the State. The sheer number of family-owned businesses means that they have an enormous impact on our economy.

Until now, however, there have been few sources of assistance for family enterprises in Maine. To meet this need, Husson College established its Center for Family Business in December of 1994, the first entity in the State to focus exclusively on promoting the start-up, growth, success, and continuation of family-owned businesses. The Center helps business owners and managers understand the ramifications of creating, operating, and transferring or selling a family business.

The Center is championed by Husson College trustee Richard Dyke, an alumnus and successful entrepreneur who has owned and operated more than three dozen businesses. His generous gift to Husson will help finance a 5,000 square foot building that will house the Center and be a visible sign of Husson's commitment to family businesses. The executive director of the Center is Susan Collins, the former gubernatorial candidate and chief of the U.S. Small Business Administration in New England. Susan's family has a fifth-generation building materials business in Aroostook County.

For more information about the Center, please call Susan at 941-7001.

Coach Bruce MacGregor retires

"The Winningest Basketball Coach in New England"

Well known to thousands of alumni from his 26 years at Husson, Bruce MacGregor announced his retirement as head coach of the Husson Braves at a packed press conference on June 6. Coach MacGregor was the most successful active basketball coach at any level in New England.

During his tenure at Husson, Coach MacGregor's teams posted 545 victories against 176 losses. The 12-time "Coach of the Year" is ranked in the top five among National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) coaches for the number of wins and winning percentage in basketball. Coach MacGregor also has earned championship titles in golf and baseball.

Coach MacGregor's teams have made 22 appearances in the NAIA New England Tournament during the past 26 years and have gone to the National Tournament eight times, including four times in the past six years.

"I am most proud of the fact that our players have succeeded both athletically and academically," Coach MacGregor said at his press conference. "We have had a very consistent program, averaging 21 wins a year over the past 26 years, and 92 percent of our athletes who have reached their senior year have gone on to graduate."

Named the 1993-94 national NAIA Administrator of the Year, Coach MacGregor has been active in NAIA affairs for most of his college coaching career, serving for ten years as the District Chair. For the past three years, he has been on the National Basketball Tournament Committee and served as Committee chairman during the past year.

Coach MacGregor is also known for conducting basketball clinics, not only throughout the northeastern United States but also as a lecturer for the State Department in eleven countries.

Husson President William H. Beardsley paid tribute to Coach MacGregor, saying: "Bruce has been an outstanding coach at Husson, but his accomplishments do not end with athletics. He is a leader who weds athletics, academics, and governance, serving as a tenured full professor, president of the Faculty Forum, as a past trustee of the College, and as a leader in the College's critical thinking initiative."

"Bruce has been a terrific coach who has gone out of his way to encourage his athletes to excel academically," said Pam Hennessey, Director for Athletics. "I am pleased that Bruce will stay on as the golf coach so that we will not be losing his leadership altogether."

President Beardsley said that Coach MacGregor also will continue his professorial and governance roles at the College.

Bruce MacGregor passes the whistle to new Head Coach Warren Caruso

Husson College President William H. Beardsley has appointed Warren Caruso '89 as the new head men's basketball coach. Caruso had been the acting head basketball coach during the past year while head coach Bruce MacGregor was on sabbatical.

"I am delighted to name Warren to the position of head coach for the Husson Braves," said President Beardsley. "Warren is a protegee of retiring head coach Bruce MacGregor, who coached him during his four years at Husson and has worked closely with him ever since. I know that Warren will continue Bruce's winning legacy."

"The promotion of Warren is a natural progression and a testament to Bruce's leadership," said Pam Hennessey, Director for Athletics.

A 1989 graduate of Husson, Coach Caruso has been an assistant coach at Husson for six years. During this past season, Coach Caruso led the Husson Braves to a Maine Athletic Conference championship and to a berth in the NAIA National Tournament.

Head Coach Warren Caruso

"I am very excited about this opportunity," said Coach Caruso, "and I am pleased that President Beardsley, Athletic Director Hennessey, and Coach MacGregor have demonstrated their confidence in me to take over a program that has had so much success."

Dr. Jessica Jenner, Dean of the School of Business, attended the Harvard University Institute for Educational Management in July.

The curriculum focused on three major themes: Leadership in a Dynamic Environment; Managing the Academic Community; and Vision, Strategy and Change.

"...IEM is designed to meet the professional development needs of senior administrators in higher education. The program sharpens the strategic, integrative and decision-making skills required of campus leaders, while also enhancing their understanding of higher education's "multiple context."

Dr. Jenner says "I was delighted to have this opportunity to develop skills so central to my role as Dean of the School of Business. It was an honor to be selected to work with other leaders from around the country to solve the challenges presented by faculty. The Harvard case method of teaching is world famous. It was tough but fun."

Helmut Koch, Assistant Professor of Science, has recently finished a one-year review of a new college chemistry text to be published by Saunders College Publishing in 1997 under the title: Essentials of General, Organic and Biological Chemistry. He also reviewed two chapters on the structure and function of the kidneys and on electrolyte balance for Wm. C. Brown's new Anatomy and Physiology book, Form and Function of the Human Body to be published next year.

Hal has had an article accepted for publication in The Science Teacher, a journal for secondary and post secondary science instructors. The article concerns a new method he has developed for solving mathematical problems related to chemical equations.

Hal was recently elected to serve on the Research and Development Committee of ACCTION. ACCTION is an international organization whose goal is to promote critical thinking through cooperative efforts at quality research and practice in education. It is an outgrowth of the Sixth International Conference on Thinking which Hal attended at M.I.T. in July of 1994.

Hal is currently engaged in Ph.D work in science (chemical education) through the Union Institute.

Teresa Steele, Associate professor at Husson College/ EMMC School of Nursing recently co-convened a seminar on Organizational Learning and Change in Healthcare as part of her doctoral studies in Nursing and Healthcare Organizations at the New England Center in Durham, NH. The five day seminar focused on innovation and action in healthcare including topics on reframing healthcare organizations, interactive planning/ managment, dialogue and defensive communication patterns.

The objective of the seminar was to help participants get beyond high abstract philosophy and develop understanding of organizational learning and gain some skills to put it into practice.

During the seminar, participants used a systems approach and explored organizational learning and change and the mismatch of problems and solutions in the healthcare arena. All participants presented a proposal of learning/change project for their organization and throughout the seminar used the project as a frame of reference to explore and learn the concepts that were presented. As the seminar came to a close the participants used Schon's "Reflection in Action" and reflected the thinking, design choices, and learning that was produced during this interactive process.

The participants had diverse backgrounds including healthcare providers, CEO's, insurance executives, attorneys, psychologists, educators, and business and organizational policy professionals.

Todd Nadeau, Director of Campus Safety and Security has recently been selected to become President of the Maine College and University Security Director's Association (MECUSDA). This association includes the following institutions: Bates College, Bowdoin College, Colby College, Maine Maritime Academy, St. Joseph College, University of Maine-Farmington, University of Maine-Orono, University of New England, and Westbrook College.

Dr. Kenneth M. Johnson, a professor in the Division of Arts and Science, has completed research on two books scheduled to be published by McGraw-Hill in 1996. The first work to be released will deal specifically with topics in Business Ethics. The second work will be published under the title Prisms of the West: An Historiography in Critical Thinking. Dr. Johnson's previous publications include—Discrimination in America's Immigration Policy: Case Study in Ethnocentrism and The Human Value System: Moral Discernment-Moral Judgement.

Dr. Charles M. Sullivan, Esq. Professor of Business, and his wife Mary Sullivan, former Husson Registrar, were honored by the Boston College Alumni Association at their 1995 Awards Ceremony and Reception in May for their life long commitment to Public Service.

Husson's 96th commencement

A sea of beaming parents, graduates, friends, faculty and staff, the largest number of master's degrees in our history, Maine's Senator Bill Cohen as our speaker, the traditional procession led by a bagpiper, flags from around the world representing our international students -- these are the lasting impressions from Husson's 96th commencement.

In May, Husson awarded dgrees to 427 students, including 74 master of science in business degrees, the largest number of master's degrees in the history of the College. The graduating class included students from the Bangor campus and our centers in Caribou, Lewiston, and Portland. In addition to being eloquently addressed by Senator Cohen, they listened to an inspiring speech from fellow classmate Thomas E. Carleton, the class president and a TKE brother.

Valedictorian of the graduating class was Michael John Murphy of Millinocket, while the salutatorian was Julie Christine Gray of Brewer. Elizabeth Donovon of Bangor received the prestigious Wall Street Journal award.

Husson honors John Kilgore and Hazel Benn '39 ETE

During the 1995 commencement ceremony, Husson College awarded honorary degrees to John E. Kilgore, Jr., of Surry, Maine, and to retired Col. Hazel E. Benn of Baileys Crossroads, Virginia. Mr. Kilgore received an honorary doctorate of Business Administration, while Col. Benn received an honorary doctorate of Public Administration.

Mr. Kilgore of Surry is a venture capitalist and lawyer with entrepreneurial projects in the United States, England, Ireland, and the Tatar Republic in Russia. During the 1950's, Mr. Kilgore played an important role in negotiating the terms of access for independent American oil companies in the Iranian Consortium. In the 1960's, he negotiated the first oil utilization agreement in Venezuela on behalf of the independent oil companies involved. In the 1970's, he entered the oil arena in the British Isles and North Sea. Today, as Chairman of Texnext, Inc., his entrepreneurial skills are focused in Tatar Republic.

A graduate of Amherst College and Harvard Law School, Mr. Kilgore is a director of the Paine Webber Group and has served as a past director of the German Marshall Fund and the American Symphony Orchestra.

"Husson College presented John Kilgore with an honorary doctorate in recognition of his wedding rural Maine life with global entrepreneurship, his leadership in the worldwide expansion of the American independent oil industry, and his career of over 50 years as a naval aviator, lawyer, and venture capitalist," President Bill Beardsley said.

A native of Oakfield, Maine, Col. Hazel Benn also received an honorary degree. Col. Benn is a graduate of Husson and George Washington University. In 1941, Col. Benn joined the staff at the United States Naval Headquarters as a civilian worker. In 1943, she enlisted in the United States Marine Corps and completed Officer's Candidate School at Mt. Holyoke College. After the war ended, Col Benn completed her bachelor's and master's degrees at Geroge Washington University.

Col. Benn was called back to active duty during the Korean conflict. Later as the head of the Education Services Branch of the U.S. Marine Corps, she developed most of the education programs still used by the Marine Corps.

Col. Benn served 32 years in the United States Marines and was one of the first four women to be promoted to the rank of full colonel. She chaired the National Educational Advisory Committee of the Veterans Administration and was a member of the Navy Disability Review Board. She also worked as the assistant executive director of the American Association of College Registrars and Admissions Officers for several years after completing her military career.

"Husson College is pleased to award an honorary doctorate of Public Administration to Hazel Benn in recognition of her lifelong dedication to her nation and to improving educational opportunities for men and women who serve in the Marine Corps," President Beardsley said.

Alumni get honorary degrees

Former students return to Husson after 40 years

By Nancy Garland (reprinted with permission of the Bangor Daily News)

At 83, Clara Swan '33 ETE has accomplished a lot. Her roles as a teacher, coach and perennial student of life have produced advanced degrees and honorary doctorates that hang on the walls of her Hampden home.

A special Husson College event Saturday meant more to her than all the ceremonies held in her honor from New England to Florida, said Swan, who stood proudly with more than 70 other Husson alumni to receive formal recognition due them for more than 40 years.

Husson College leaders bestowed honorary degrees on more than 75 alumni Saturday [September 23, 1995] in a unique ceremony. The degrees recognized the work, the ability and the contributions to society made by people who completed their work at the school before 1954, the marker year when the college began granting bachelor's degrees by permission of the Legislature. Before 1955, most students were diploma, or "special" students seeking only the skills needed to gain employment.

Linked to the college since 1930, Swan arrived for classes from the Downeast town of Princeton. Swan's name was the first one announced for a degree Saturday morning in a moving ceremony that marked both Husson's heritage and future possibilities.

Seventy-eight people followed Swan to the stage, some of them her former students when she taught business classes at the college, some of them former athletes who played under her direction as an able women's basketball coach.

The group was recognized during Husson's homecoming weekend. The event also featured a dedication of a $665,000 ceremonial lounge, art gallery, chapel and social area in the basement of Peabody Hall.

A woman of action, Swan accepted her honorary degree, then began handing out degrees to others as names were announced by Paul Husson, son of one of the founders of the college, Chesley Husson.

Most of the honorary degree holders are elderly people. Some walked on canes, others came from as far away as Florida to get the formal recognition due them after more than 40 years.

Many recalled the college from its earlier days in downtown Bangor. They attended college during the 1930s Depression and during World War II.

William Beardsley, Husson College president, praised the work ethic of students during Husson's early days, many of whom came from poor families and knew what it meant to put in a day's work after classes were done to merely survive.

"We welcome you who attended college during the Great Depression, the second World War, the rise of communism and the Korean War. You and your classmates gave us the freedom we know today," Beardsley said in opening remarks.

Founded in 1898, Husson has its roots in the old Shaw Business School which was located on the Bass Block in downtown Bangor. In the late 1920s the school was renamed the Bangor School of Commerce and moved to Columbia Street then in 1940 to Park Street. In 1948 the school was renamed Husson College. In 1967, the school moved to a 200-acre tract, the former Hillman Dairy Farm off Broadway.

Personal triumphs abounded at the ceremony as the elderly graduates came forward to get their degrees. Grown children embraced their moms and dads after they came off the stage. Grandchildren looked up proudly at gray-headed grandparents who, by attending the ceremony, were passing on to them the value of education.

Inez Wood Collier, Class of 1938, came from a family of nine children. A former business teacher, Collier recalled arriving in Bangor from Ellsworth in the mid-1930s. She attended classes on Columbia Street and scrubbed floors at the King's Daughters Home on Ohio St. for room and board.

Now retired, Collier, married with two grown children, finally got a bachelor's degree Saturday, 57 years after her first graduation.

Husson College has expanded its identity and enrollment from its earlier days as a business college in a second-story walk-up suite. Today the college has more than 2,000 students--1,000 of them full-time day students and 1,200 part-time evening students. It offers more than 30 undergraduate programs in education, business, health and professional studies and master's degree programs. It has continuing education programs in Bangor, Caribou, Lewiston and Portland. Many international students attend Husson's International Center for Language Studies on the Bangor campus.

Remarking on Husson's transformation, Beardsley assured the group that "the view may have changed, but the students and mission are the same."

Honorary degree recipients who attended the ceremony on September 23, 1995:
Bachelor of Science degree: Gerald E. Ballanger, Carol L. Budden, Beryl Crosby Clark, Inez Wood Collier, Robert E. Daigle, Lawrence W. Davies, LaRoy A. Derby, T. Merrill Dellaire Dollar, Barbara J. Chesley H. Husson award presented

The following excerpt was taken from the presentation speech by President William Beardsley at the Honorary degree ceremony. This presidential award was presented for the first time to a very surprised recipient.

"...At Husson College, as it approaches its centennial, the qualities that Chesley H. Husson instilled in the institution live on. They are embodied in a gentleman who loves students as he loves his college; one whose door is always open and for whom each student is the center of his being for the moments they are together; one who experiences each alumni and fellow employee as family and who approaches the joys and tribulations of Husson College as if blood runs through its veins. Here is an individual who seemingly greets each student, alumni and colleague by name and in his or her native tongue, who passionately fights for each discouraged student, seeing vision where others find despair, and who sees through the dust to the flicker of every "diamond in the rough." His compassion, dedication and loyalty are legend.

Therefore, in recognition of his love for and lifelong commitment to Husson College, and with appreciation of the Husson alumni, trustees, faculty, staff, students and friends, this Chesley H. Husson award is hereby bestowed upon Paul E. Husson."

Alumni invited to Job Fair

March 1, 1996, in Portland, Maine

The Maine Recruiting Consortium invites employers to Maine each year to interview students from all of the college and university campuses. This year the employers will use the Consortium as a source for hiring experienced employees also.

Husson College is one of seventeen college members of the Maine Recruiting Consortium. This year, in an attempt to expand the scope of the recruiting event, the member colleges have opened it up to their alumni and their underclass students as well as their seniors. In addition to hiring entry-level college graduates, employers may also hire experienced college graduates (you).

Although the event doesn't happen until next year (the day after Leap Day), if you want to participate, you should contact the Career Development office at Husson College by the end of 1995 to register. Twenty-five companies have already signed up, and by the end of the year we will be able to give you a good idea of all employers who will come.

Call Bud Vassey in the Career office with your questions: (207) 941-7104.
